Truce Signed

Fighting Ends Tonight

By 5/Fg. Bob McNeil
PANmunjom, July 27 (AP) — Truce delegates this morning quietly wound up their two years of peace-waging and rang down the curtain on the 37-month-old shooting war in Korea.

THE FORMAL END to the war was wrapped up in 10 minutes of document-signing. (Continued on Page 14, Col. 4)

Clark Says Difficulties Not Ended

By 5/Fg. Bob McNeil
ENROUTE, July 27 (AP) — General Mark W. Clark today told the troops in his command that we cannot turn our backs on the conflict and go home after an armistice is signed.

The U.N. commander described the armistice's armistice as a possible step toward peace but not the end of the war until the opposing governments reach a final political settlement.

The soldier in the United States has always been arrayed against the Communists in Korea, and Allied forces' belief that the Communists' overthrown governments will be restored.

Graves: The military leaders of each side have agreed to recommend to their governments that a political conference be held within three months. General Clark said today that the armistice does not mean an immediate or even an early withdrawal from Korea. He stated that the United States would not lower its guard or discontinue its strength after the signing of the truce.

THE COMPLETE MESSAGE follows:

"Three years of wrangling continue, accompanied during the past two years by determined and frustrating negotiations. We have at last brought an armistice to the peoples of South Korea and her allies.

The Days, Months and Years prior to the Armistice and Truce Signing

After the Communist offensives in the spring of 1951, combat action subsided and the battle lines stabilized in the general vicinity of the 38th Parallel, where the fighting had begun. With the status quo restored in the main, each side could claim some measure of success. Prospects for a military decision, however, dissipated as the opponents dug in and fortified their positions in depth. Under these conditions, continued stalemate or a negotiated agreement became the main alternatives since major offensives would require a high cost in casualties to breach the new defensive lines.

The Communists had spurned or ignored earlier attempts to initiate negotiations, but on June 23, Jacob Malik, the Soviet delegate to the United Nations (U.N.), suggested that the belligerents discuss the possibilities of a cease-fire. The United States and its allies quickly instructed General Matthew B. Ridgway, the U.N. commander, to arrange a military settlement that would bring the fighting to a halt and reduce the heavy drain in manpower and funds. Since the Communists might not be ready to seek a permanent political settlement in Korea, the United States sought an agreement that would endure over an extended period of time. At the same time, Ridgway was told to avoid any discussions of political matters, such as a return to the 38th Parallel as a boundary, the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, or the future disposition of Taiwan.

The first contact with the Communists across the conference table came on July 8, when liaison officers met at Kaesong, the old capital of Korea, located just below the 38th Parallel and 35 miles northwest of Seoul. Two days later, the plenary sessions began amid high hopes that the conflict would soon be brought to an end; there was no indication that it would take more than two years to reach an agreement on an armistice. But it was obvious even at the time that when the Chinese delegates sat down as equals before the U.N. Command (U.N.C.) representatives, the world power balance, at least in Asia, was for the foreseeable future profoundly changed. Certainly in this case, power for the Chinese had indeed “grown out of the barrel of a gun.”

To head the U.N. Command truce team, Ridgway selected his capable naval commander, Vice Admiral C. Turner Joy. Together, they chose the other four members of the delegation: Army Major General Henry I. Hodges, Air Force Major General Laurence C. Craigie, Navy Rear Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, and Major General Paik Sun Yup of the Republic of Korea (ROK) Army. All five men were military professionals and had little or no political or diplomatic experience.

Across the table, the Communists had assembled a formidable group of negotiators. Chief delegate and nominal leader was General Nam Il, chief of staff of the Conference Site at Kaesong, July 10, 1951, the day negotiations opened.

We had a great turnout in Washington, D.C. between July 23 through July 28, 50 years have passed since the War in Korea. We had over 600 Veterans and wives attend. Many of us still carry the battle scars, both physical and mentally. We were ordered to Korea do a job and we did that job. The world is a safer place today.

Promoting KWVA National

Traveling for the KWVA has kept me busy for the past two months. On Memorial Day many of the National Commanders and Presidents were invited to the White House for Breakfast and a Photo session with President Bush and the First Lady, Laura Bush.

On June 1st, I was invited to be the keynote speaker at the Plover, Wisconsin State Korean War Memorial. The Memorial is located on an island in a very beautiful location.

I returned home late on the 2nd of June and early on the 3rd of June was flown to San Francisco where the Dolana Institute (Sponsoring Honoring The Parents of America and South Korea Movement) put on a culture performance and honored the Korean War Veterans.

On the 8th of June, I had the honor to represent the Korean War Veterans as Grand Marshal of the Miss Ohio parade.

This event was sponsored by the Mansfield Elks Lodge #56. The Mansfield KWV Chapter #51 provided the Color Guard.

Bill Shaw President of Adirondack Chapter #60 and Raymond Waldron Parade Chairman invited me to Saratoga Springs, New York (The home of the Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner) on June 14th (Flag Day). Once again I was honored to represent the Korean War Veterans. The Saratoga Springs Chapter #60 had a great banquet honoring all Korean War Veterans. The Adirondack Chapter #60 housed me at the Gideon Putnam Hotel and Conference Center.

After returning from Saratoga Springs I received a call from the History Channel to fly to Boston Ma. for an interview. The program will air in November this year. There were several Korean War Veterans interviewed from different parts of the country.

On July 1, Mr. Lee from the Christian Broadcasting came to National Headquarters to interview National Secretary Howard Camp and myself for a radio broadcast.

National Charter

Every state I visited whenever possible I talked to representatives from Congressmen and Senate leaders to try to get support for our national charter. Many said they would support our effort.

Until the next time, I remain,

The remains of a Korean War U.S. Marine buried as an “unknown” have been identified and returned to his family. He is Pfc. Ronald D. Lilledahl of Minneapolis, Minn. This marks the first unknown serviceman from the Korean War to be identified.

On Nov. 28, 1950, Lilledahl’s unit, Company C of the 7th Marines, was surrounded by Chinese forces on the west side of the Chosin Reservoir and cut off from supporting units. During a seesaw battle throughout the day, Lilledahl reportedly was struck and killed by enemy fire and buried in a shallow grave.

In the ensuing withdrawal, C Company was unable to retrieve all of its dead, including Lilledahl.

Following the armistice, the North Korean government returned remains believed to be those of U.S. servicemen, but forensic technology at the time was unable to make positive identifications on more than 800 of those. They were interred in the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, known as The Punchbowl, as “unknowns.”

In 1999, the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory Hawaii (CILHI) exhumed two of the Korean War unknowns for the purpose of possible identification. Between 1999 and 2002, CILHI scientists submitted 10 bone or dental samples to the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory but no usable mitochondrial DNA data could be extracted from the remains.

Broadening their search effort, CILHI researchers uncovered a postage-stamp sized chest x-ray in Lilledahl’s medical records at the National Personnel Records Center. The scientific staff enlarged it many times and was able to show very strong consistency with the remains. The final piece of evidence confirming his identity came from a new computer program recently developed by CILHI, which allows scientists to compare dental remains to a vast database of almost 40,000 dental patterns seen in the U.S. Lilledahl’s were unique among the entire database, lending tremendous weight to the significance of the match.

Annual negotiations led by the Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office since 1996 have enabled CILHI teams to conduct 25 operations in North Korea, recovering what may be 178 remains of Americans. More than 8,100 are still missing in action from the Korean War.

Defense Official Voices U.S. Support for NATO Personnel Recovery Efforts

The senior Department of Defense official responsible for policy oversight of personnel recovery opened a key NATO conference in Naples last week.

Jerry D. Jennings, the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for POW/Missing Personnel Affairs, delivered keynote remarks to military representatives of NATO nations, gathered for a three-day conference on personnel recovery. The aim of the conference was to improve cooperation among NATO members in combat search and rescue.

“America, like the nations you represent, leaves no one behind on the battlefield, whether they be American or allied and coalition personnel,” he said during his presentation in Naples.

Jennings met with key U.S. EUCOM and NATO military leaders to emphasize U.S. support of enhanced efforts to build an effective and credible combat search and rescue capability among coalition warfighting forces.

“We need to build a personnel recovery synergy within NATO that maximizes the capabilities of each member. The strengths of some members will complement the resource limits of other Alliance members,” he added.

He also emphasized the importance of alliance partners planning and training together in the area of personnel recovery, and noted that fully trained and supported recovery teams “can ensure that we have the capability, not just the desire, to recover our isolated forces from harms way.”

His delegation’s visit in Europe concluded Friday with a visit with the commanders of the Italian Air Force’s 9th Air Brigade and the 15th Wing at Practica Di Mare air base near Rome. Here, Jennings was briefed by IAF personnel and toured Italy’s largest air base to see firsthand the forces dedicated to combat search and rescue.

He also met with U.S. officials in Italy to discuss details of a possible recovery operation of American WWII losses at Lake Garda in northern Italy. In addition to personnel recovery policy, Jennings oversees personnel accounting policy pertaining to worldwide operations to bring home the remains of Americans who are missing in action from WWII, the Korean War, the Cold War and the Vietnam War.

News From The President, Ray Unger

The Memorial ceremonies have passed but the memories never will. My wife, Elsie, and I along with about forty Korean War Ex-Pows, their wives and surviving spouses attended the Memorial Ceremony in Hawaii. Nick Nishimoto almost single handedly made all the arrangements, from the ceremonies, trips, outdoor barbeque and the banquet, which about 90 people attended. We had a great time. Thank you Nick and Barbara for your hard work. This won’t be the last reunion in Hawaii after all. It will be April 4 -11, 2004. More information to follow.

The second Memorial ceremony that I was going to attend was the White House Breakfast and the laying of the wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Unfortunately, I had to cancel at the last minute because of the flu, but our organization was well represented by Jack Chapman, Jim Ball and Elliott Sortillo. They went to the White House Breakfast and laid the wreath at the tomb. Thanks to Harley Coon for helping us organize this.

Phil O’Brien from the Department of POW/MIA in the Pentagon has accepted my invitation to be the guest speaker at our banquet. As many of you know, Phil has attended our reunions for many years. Those who have not spoken with Phil have missed out; those who have spoken with him are astonished by his knowledge and memory.

Dear members and readers:

Articles from newspapers take a lot of time to scan and most are too long to retype. Photos from newspapers also do not copy well. I tend to use original photos and articles that are typewritten in lower case. I must optically scan text into the computer and it helps when articles are typed well and length kept to a minimum.— Editor.

RAH Vidio Ad
June 25th 2000 marked the 50th Anniversary of the start of the Korean War. To commemorate the occasion the cable TV service, History Channel featured an all-day television special “Korea - The Forgotten War.”

As a veteran of that conflict I naturally spent a lot of my free time that day watching the series. As is their format, the History Channel interspersed newsreel action footage with taped interviews with historians and those who were there.

As I watched one veteran being interviewed, I saw tears well up in his eyes as he struggled to describe his emotions during the final moments of that horrendous conflict as he waited for the silence of the promised cease-fire. I found myself crying also, together with this man who I had never met as he took me back to relive those same unforgettable moments, one lonely night, 50 years ago....

In the early 1950’s, my interests at age 19 were girls and cars, in that order. Plans for any sort of a military career, however short, was not high on my list of desirable job options. I was born and raised in England; having survived the blitz of London and the attacks of the V-1 and V-2 missiles, I had already had more than enough of war. However I had a draft card and a Selective Service number which I had never met as it took me back to relive those same unforgettable moments, one lonely night, 50 years ago....

By Ron Rosen

Author’s Note: Fifty-three plus years ago, the North Korean People’s Army stormed across the 38th Parallel to begin what would one day be known as the “Forgotten War.” It took over three years and the lives of almost 40,000 Americans before the Korean War finally ground to a halt. Many excellent true combat stories have been written about the War, but relatively little about it’s July 27th 1953 final chapter. This narrative provides a somewhat different historical perspective, and is dedicated to our comrades who never returned.

J

That a peculiar double standard existed at that time which allowed me to be drafted, but did not permit me to volunteer!

It actually took about six more months before I found myself wearing the uniform of the U.S. Army. Due to my civilian electronics experience I was assigned to the Signal Corps, and after training I was shipped to Korea in 1952.

Ours was a small family that had been through a lot, and I had no desire to have my parents spend their days and nights worrying about their only son in the middle of a shooting war. My problem was soon solved, however. As anyone who has corresponded with a member of the military on overseas duty knows, letters from home are usually not addressed to the country where the soldier is serving. If serving in the Army in the European Theater, letters are addressed to an APO (Army Post Office) Box Number, New York; if in the Pacific and Far East, to APO Box Number, San Francisco. I therefore concocted a story of my peaceful and boring duty on a remote part of Japan, and their minds were at ease.

The truth was that I was in Korea, part of a unique traveling radio repair team. A 2-1/2 ton truck, towing it’s own power generator, had been outfitted with a special body that contained a complete radio repair shop, including test equipment, spare parts, and just about everything needed to repair a malfunctioning army radio in the field. We would roam throughout the various line divisions, repairing and placing their communications equipment back in service. We would stay a day, a week, or a month, depending to a large extent on how badly their equipment had been mauled in battle. We were never very far from the fighting front, and the thunder of bombs and artillery were our constant companion.

It seemed as though peace talks at Panmunjon had been going on forever. So many promises of the end of hostilities had been made and broken. On that fateful night of July 27th 1953 a cease-fire was supposed to take effect at 10:00 p.m. There was no reason for us to think that this would be any different from the last scheduled cease-fire — or the one before that — when peace talks would invariably fall through, and the guns boomed on - - but for some reason, this one felt different.

Like that other veteran I had seen interviewed, I sat listening to the sound of the artillery along with thousands of other soldiers and civilians within earshot of the war. As I waited, alone in a tent in the middle of nowhere, by candlelight I wrote a long letter to my family back in the States. I told them where I was, I apologized for lying to them, I shared with them so very, many thoughts that I was unable to express previously. I ended by telling them that there was a cease-fire scheduled for 10:00 p.m. that evening, and if the noise of the guns did not stop they would never see this letter.

At approximately 10 minutes before the 10:00 deadline, I actually began to detect a lessening of the thunder of the guns. I kept my eyes on my watch. In the last few minutes the gunfire became sporadic, then finally started to taper off.

At exactly 10:00 p.m. the guns fell silent.

For the next 50 years.

And I mailed the letter.

Ron Rosen, 7901 40th Avenue N., No. 117 St. Petersburg, FL 33709 Tel: (727) 544-9623

(Thank you Ron for a great story. I held on to this letter for over 1 year because I wanted to print it in this issue. I took the liberty to revise some years because when you read this story it will be beyond or near the 50 year Anniversary. Korean War Veterans you can be proud of your service to help a country gain its freedom and become the great country South Korea is today. –Editor.)

Book Review

Operation Aviary
By Col. Douglas C. Dillard
USA Ret.

The Book
At this time over fifty years since the end of the Korean War, we have just experienced similar special operations by Special Forces who carried out almost exactly the same type clandestine airborne operations as covered in this book. Captain Amerine, the Special Forces Commander of the initial Special Forces personnel in Afghanistan, conducted their operation in the same manner as Ranger Sergeant Miles did in 1951 in North Korea. Miles destroyed most of a Chinese Communist Volunteer Army Division with his directed airstrikes using a simple Army radio, whereas Captain Amerine’s troopers utilized state of the art computers, global positioning devices, and radically improved radio equipment.

The results were the same, the destruction of enemy forces. This book details such cases including some tragic losses. The uniqueness of this book is the fact that it reflects the first hand experiences of mine as well as the personal histories of other AVIARY veterans who flew on these dangerous missions, most for an entire year. The book provides details on special operations during the Korean War that are still not generally known. The combined use of American, British, both South and North Koreans and Chinese volunteers in behind the lines combat is unique in itself. The details fill in the missing elements on clandestine airborne operations that other articles and books do not address.

I believe the final chapter of the US Army’s use of Homing Pigeons by my unit in Korea is not only an interesting story but also historical in perspective for the US Army.

Generally, the scene is set, as to conditions present that influence the political leaders to make decisions that lead to significant actions, and quite often to hostil-
THE LAST DAY

By M. J. Cramer

As I recall . . . July 27, 1953 was a hot humid day with the morning sun shining through a misty haze. The smells of war were ever present, rotting bodies, cordite and of course our own stinky sweaty uniforms. I think we had one shower in two months. There had been rumor of a cease fire, but we had heard that several times prior. K Company 224th Inf. 40th Inf. Div. was holding positions on or near ‘Bloody Ridge’. To our left front loomed ‘Sand Bag Castle’ with the Chinese and 40th lines at some point about 30 yards apart. I think Love Co. was holding that area. To the right of ‘Sand Bag’ was ‘Joe Stalin Hill’, totally void of any vegetation. Some tree stumps, about four to five feet tall, were all that was left. Patrol size units from K Company probed ‘Stalin’ on night recons but failed to make contact. Intelligence had reported it was defended by no more than a squad of Chinese. Bum intelligence, as we found out the morning of the 28th. Several hundred Chinese were observed singing and waving banners. Some of them came to our wire, they carried hand made dolls as gifts, we were ordered to avoid contact with them.

But, back to the 27th, as the day progressed we could hear artillery rounds incoming and probably landing back at Division and Regimental Headquarters. The only thing going on in our sector was some small arms fire. I had glassed the hill and did not see any targets. Sometime in mid afternoon we began receiving mortar and artillery rounds. Through the smoke and haze we were expecting an assault. We could see nothing. The guys in the L.P. reported the same. Over the sound power line came the order to fire our F.P.L. for several minutes. I was on a light 30. With the incoming rounds and our F.P.L. fire, the sounds were indescribable, none of us could hear, we tried to read each others’ lips. Gradually our hearing returned. One of the guys in the squad had his orders, on his person, to rotate home. He was kneeling on the floor of the bunker or the trench saying his rosary. I think the sight of him caused me to mumble through the Lord’s Prayer - I was thinking about the ‘Valley of Death’ - Wow! Am I there? Finally our big stuff 4.2 mortars, 105s and 155s opened up. They dropped W. P. in the valley, what a sight to behold. Everyone was firing anything they had into that valley. ‘Stalin Hill’ and ‘Sandbag’ were totally enveloped in the dust of explosions. I think they reduced the height of that hill on the Chinese side by a foot or so. As 2200 hours neared, the firing and explosions died down and then stopped. We remained on 100 percent alert as dawn broke on the 28th of July. Some of the troops had slumped into sleep while others shouted into each others ears still unable to hear in normal tones.

On the morning of the 28th we had visitors in the trench. These guys were dressed like they were from a recruiting poster. They wore clean fatigue with sharp creases and each carried a camera, most with telephoto lenses. They took pictures of each other posing around our positions, we found it amusing. The Lt. told me to escort two or three of the men into the valley, they were U.N. Observers. They spoke in broken English. The Lt. told me to take no weapon into the valley. I stuck a .45 in my belt in the small of my back. They followed in my foot steps. Half way down into the valley they indicated they wanted to return to the MLR. I think the sights and smells were too much, but I was happy to make the move up and out of there. That evening a reinforced squad of us stayed on the hill. All the positions and bunkers had been blown up by the demolitions squads earlier that afternoon. The Sgt. in charge said we would set up on the highest point of the Company area. We had two light 30’s some BARs, M-2 Carbines, sound power and PR 6 for radio contact with Company C.O. Fifteen minute security checks were the orders. The evening was uneventful. We could see cooking fires on the Chinese hill. As dawn approached, we were anxious to pull out of there, head south, and rejoin our Company. We shouldered our light 30’s ammo cans and BARs The only evidence of our being there that evening was two or three empty whiskey bottles. When we got down to the road, someone joked about Custer’s Last Stand, that would have been us if an attack would have come. We took one last look up that hill. So many memories, so many people, the faded roster I have now is full of names but very few faces. We all did what we had to do, and did it as good as we could. We were young of age when we arrived, we were old with experience on this day.

About three miles down the road, we came to a staging area, pup tents, mess tents and our friends of K Company. We were directed up another hill, this one had vegetation growing on it and trees. We dug in at the top and went on night patrols. On the road we found other GIs doing the same. During the day we cut fields of fire, we hoped we would not have to use them. We moved to Kumwhan then on to Chorwan. New hills, no names, living like animals. Freezing in the winter, but surviving better than those who went before us.

We at least had winter issue. Some of my friends back home had told me winter issue was not available to them in the early 1950s. Spring came and we were trucked in to Ascom City, Inchon, riding in a 2 1/2 ton truck - what a luxury! Down to the pier and on to L.S.T.s for our ride out in the bay to the U.S.S. General Gordon, barely visible in the morning mist. As we settled in the lower troop compartments we were told our trip home would take two weeks. San Francisco would be our port. Everyone was in good spirits we had done our jobs and made it out of Korea.

I’ll never forget the Lieutenant, after the news of our two weeks to the states, he said, “I will not feel comfortable until we pass under the Golden Gate Bridge! There is a war going on right now and we could be involved in it”. He told us the French were getting beat up in a place called French Indo China. This meant nothing to us, it was 1954, we were going home. As we passed under the bridge we reminded the Lieutenant. Little did we know, that French Indo China (Vietnam) would be a part of our lives for years to come.

July/August, 2003
Those who have experienced the painful loss of dear friends in battle already know the feeling. Those who have not shall probably never know; for it is impossible to truly describe such heartfelt feelings.

Because of the men I was privileged to be associated with during my Korean air war experiences, I am firmly convinced that valor and courage are not inborn, they are not hereditary; instead, they are the result of their then-current environment:

And, while I was serving with the 18th Fighter-Bomber Group and the pilots of those old derelict F-51 Mustangs, I can proudly state that: I ate with heroes, I drank with heroes, and to a certain extent, a part of me died with many of those heroes.

Perhaps another of my personal experiences, which I describe here, will help to explain what I mean:

First Lieut. Claude R. “Spud” Taylor, was a shining example of that unique type of individual ...

Following the North Korean invasion of South Korea on Sunday morning, June 25, 1950, we had gone into Korea in mid-July 1950 with the first increment of the ‘Dallas Project’, a hastily-formed squadron of volunteer fighter pilots from the USAF’s 18th Fighter-Bomber Group, then stationed at Clark Field.

Spud Taylor was one of the first to raise his hand when the 18th Group Commander, Col. Hank Norman asked for volunteers to go into battle; he went up to Korea as a “buck fighter pilot”; I was to be the full-time Squadron Intelligence Officer and just a part-time combat pilot.

It didn’t take either, or any of us, long to realize that our gallant, but feeble efforts, initially flying ten derelict F-51 Mustangs from the dirt airstrip at Taegu, South Korea, were having little effect in slowing the North Korean’s relentless offensive drive toward Pusan. Things improved considerably in early August, with the arrival of a shipload of 150 ‘new’ F-51 Mustangs and a batch of experienced fighter pilots fresh from the States on the USS Boxer. But it wasn’t until at least two months later, during September, 1950, that we honestly felt that we might be on the winning side. General Douglas MacArthur’s audacious amphibious landing at the port of Inchon put a completely new perspective on what had, until then, been a defensive war.

The North Korean forces were forced into a complete rout; their offensive pressure around Taegu and the Pusan Perimeter was released immediately, and our attack efforts were simultaneously redirected to support of our troops racing toward the North Korean capitol city of Pyongyang.

But, before getting too far ahead of our story, it’s appropriate to tell a bit more about Spud Taylor ...

Like so many of the World War II Army Air Corps fighter pilots, Spud had been released from active duty in the drastic Reductions-in-Force of 1946. Having been trained as a professional jazz musician, Taylor made a reasonable living playing with small combos at various nightclubs and cocktail lounges.

But, also, like so many others, he too had been afflicted with the “fighter pilot bug” during the war and wanted very much to be flying again. He applied for Recall to Active Duty and was pleasantly surprised to be accepted for P-51 retraining during the Spring of 1948. After a brief tour of duty in the ‘States, he was transferred to Clark Field, Philippines, traveling with his family by ship.

It was during the voyage from San Francisco to Manila that he met another fighter pilot with unusual musical talent ... a singer with a pleasant deep bass voice, and it was only logical that they should share many pleasant musical hours en route.

Lieutenant Taylor stood about five foot seven inches and, soaking wet could not have weighed 150 pounds. He wore a well-developed bushy walrus mustache and affected a slouched, rhythmic walk; he played beautiful Dixieland Jazz on the saxophone and, well, ... he just looked the part of a jazz musician!

His new friend, the other fighter pilot en route to Clark Field, First Lieutenant James ...Daniel James, had the deep, well-trained baritone voice, and in contrast to Spud’s slight stature, he was six foot four, and tipped the scale at about 220 pounds; he was built like a pro football lineman.

They made quite a combination study in contrasts ...’Spud’ Taylor and his new friend ‘Chappie’ James.

Besides the other visual contrasts between the two, Spud Taylor was white and Chappie James was an Afro-American black, ... in the days when it wasn’t all too popular to be a black officer ...the only black officer in a recently-integrated all-white fighter squadron. Black or not, Chappie’s personality was such that he was immediately accepted as a professional U.S. Air Force Officer-fighter pilot. Both were assigned to the 12th Fighter Bomber Squadron at Clark Field.
A few months before the start of the Korean war, the two pilots were flying Instrument practice together in a tandem-seat T-33, trainer version of the F-80 jet fighter. Moments after take-off, the engine flamed out and they were forced to crash land, wheels up, in a rough sugar cane field several miles north of Clark’s airstrip.

Spud, in the front cockpit, was knocked unconscious when his head hit the instrument panel in the crash. Chappie, in the rear cockpit, was bruised and shaken, but remained conscious, but found that the ship’s canopy had been jammed in the closed position during the crash, and he was unable to open it electrically. Chappie immediately unstrapped from his parachute harness, stood on his seat with his broad back against the canopy, and with almost superhuman strength, was able to force the clamshell barrier open enough to scramble out. The ship’s fuel tank was ruptured in the crash and there was a very strong possibility that the leaking fuel could catch fire at any time.

Although shaken and bruised, Chappie realized that Taylor was still motionless in the front cockpit and, despite the hazard of the spilled fuel, climbed back onto the wing and somehow managed to lift the limp form out of the cockpit and drag him a couple hundred feet to safety.

Few men could claim such devoted friends as were Spud Taylor and Chappie James and their families.

Together still, in July, 1950, in the newly-redesignated 12th Fighter-Bomber Squadron at Taegu, Korea, flying combat missions together whenever the schedule would permit, they complemented each other in the air as well.

On October 20, 1950, following the Inchon Landings, Spud Taylor, while flying element leader, was hitting the North Korean capitol, Pyongyang’s airfield area as part of the “softening up” prior to an air drop by one of our Paratroop units, hoping to cut off a goodly number of the retreating Red Army.

During his dive-bombing and rocketing of the airfield, Spud’s airplane was hit by ground fire ... hit badly enough, apparently, that he was barely able to maintain control long enough to pull up a couple thousand feet and turn southerly toward our front lines. After just a few miles, however, the engine caught fire, forcing Spud to take to his parachute ...he had to get out while still several miles north of friendly territory.

His chute was seen to open, and he reportedly appeared to be conscious as he floated down, for he waved to one of his wingmen who flew by to check his condition.

Our ground troops came in by mass parachute drop early on the following morning, taking the area with but little opposition. Spud Taylor’s body was found where he had touched down, still in his chute harness. He had been shot while descending in his parachute.

Spud’s great friend, Chappie James ...who had pulled him from the crashed T-33 at Clark Field the previous year ...was absolutely beside himself with grief when told of Spud’s fate. He had to be physically restrained from running out to one of our armed Mustangs with the intention of seeking single-handed retribution for Taylor’s death. Instead, he was ordered off to Tokyo for a week’s Rest Leave, after which he returned to Korea to finish far more than his required 100 combat missions before returning to the United States late in December, 1950.

Daniel “Chappie” James was promoted to Captain before leaving Korea; he went on to a highly successful Air Force career, rising rapidly through various command positions, and further combat responsibilities in Viet Nam ...to ultimately become our nation’s first black four-star General, as head of North American Air Defense Command, (NORAD).

General James did much to inspire hope among the black youth of our country, and he always “told it like it was” ...he told the youngsters that they could not expect freedom and equality to be given to them as a “Right” ...they had to “get their ass in gear and work for it”!

General ‘Chappie’ James died of a heart attack in 1978, at a young 56 years of age, and was buried with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery, Washington, DC.

After 48 Years of Waiting, Korea Cease-Fire Service is Finally Recognized

After 48 years of service in the Republic of Korea, U.S. Armed Forces will finally receive the service medal recognition they earned and deserve for their historically dangerous and hostile duty. Approximately 40,000 troops have served on the peninsula each year since 1954. On 2 DEC 2002, President Bush signed the National Defense Authorization for year 2003 that included the KOREA DEFENSE SERVICE MEDAL to be awarded to all armed forces members who served from 28 July 1954 to a date to be determined by the Secretary of Defense. The House and Senate passed the bill in November. This will affect many thousands of former and current servicemen and women. Korea service is the only U.S. military deployment standing the line face-to-face with an enemy without a service medal award.

Representative Elton Gallegly (R-CA 23) was the first Member of Congress to create legislation for the service medal on May 22, 2001. His bill had 243 bipartisan cosponsors that included a majority of members on the House Armed Services Committee. A companion bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) on June 7, 2001 with 63 bipartisan cosponsors that also included a majority on the Senate Armed Services Committee.

There has never been a surrender or formal truce agreement officially ending the Korean War in spite of 48 years of negotiation. Only a fragile cease-fire agreement is in place and technically, the countries remain at a state-of-war. Since cease-fire service began in 1954 there have been over 40,000 breaches to the cease-fire agreement by North Korean Forces. At least 1,200 U.S. personnel have died, hundreds wounded, and 87 captured and held prisoner. There are more than 2,300 Republic of Korea casualties.

(I will print how to obtain medal when known. Editor)

U.S. Troops Slated to Move South From Korean DMZ

By Gerry J. Gilmore, American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, June 6, 2003 – U.S. and Republic of Korea officials have agreed to a plan to realign American forces stationed in “The Land of the Morning Calm.”

In June 4-5 meetings held in the South Korean capital city of Seoul, according to a joint U.S.-South Korean statement, it was decided the operation would consist of two phases:

Phase 1 – U.S. forces at installations north of the Han River would consolidate in the Camp Casey (Tongduchon) and Camp Red Cloud (Uijongbu) areas. Both bases are north of Seoul and the Han, but well south of the demilitarized zone that separates North and South Korea. The 14,000-strong U.S. Army 2nd Infantry Division, which provides troops to bases near the DMZ, is headquartered at Camp Red Cloud.

Phase 2 – U.S. forces north of the Han River would move to key hubs south of the Han River. U.S. and Korean officials agreed to continue rotational U.S. military training north of the Han even after Phase 2 is completed, according to the statement. The realignment operation would take several years to complete, according to the joint statement. Realignment of American troops in South Korea is part of an ongoing U.S. force assessment involving overseas and stateside troops. About 37,000 U.S. troops are currently serving in South Korea.

U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Paul D. Wolfowitz noted at a June 2 press conference in Seoul that “a substantial amount of money” would be invested — about $11 billion, according to U.S. defense officials — over the next four years “in some 150 programs to enhance U.S. capabilities here on the (Korean) Peninsula.”

The U.S.-ROK statement noted that the realignment would also involve moving U.S. forces out of Yongsan garrison in Seoul.

Wolfowitz returned June 3 from a trip to Singapore, Seoul and Tokyo to discuss mutual security matters with East Asian leaders.

The deputy defense secretary observed in Seoul “that any basic changes we make to our ground forces here will affect the 2nd Infantry Division.” However, U.S. “commitment to the defense of (South) Korea remains firm,” the deputy defense secretary asserted at the Seoul press conference.

The purpose of realigning U.S. forces in South Korea, Wolfowitz pointed out, “is to enhance deterrence, not to weaken it.”

More U.S.-ROK meetings on the subject of U.S. forces’ realignment in South Korea are slated in the future, according to the statement.

Chicken Soup for the Veteran’s Soul

After the attack on America and during our country’s current state of war, there is no better time to turn to those who have experienced such troubled times for comfort and guidance. Now the legacies and stories of veterans are living in the New York Times best-seller, Chicken Soup for the Veteran’s Soul, a select collection of inspiring and gripping stories of heroism, bravery, comradeship, laughter and patriotism.

Tales of Gettysburg, Iwo Jima, Anzio, Guadalcanal, Omaha Beach, the Chosin Reservoir and Hamburger Hill are places woven into our national psyche because we all know someone who selflessly served their country in faraway places like these, defending the freedom we all share. Chicken Soup for the Veteran’s Soul celebrates these extraordinary men and women who changed the course of history.

You will be overcome with emotion from these powerful true stories of veterans and their families, many of whom are sharing their experiences for the first time. Whether they were Prisoners of War, Congressional Medal of Honor recipients, USO volunteers, loved ones who waited at home, or GIs who battled daily in the trenches, they all put their dreams on hold, held fast to their faith and overcame their fears in the name of freedom.

Whether you are a veteran yourself, are related to one or simply enjoy the rights that they fought so hard to defend, this remarkable book will leave you with a heightened admiration for our nation’s best. Wolfowitz Praises DMZ Soldiers, Marines ‘On the Front Lines of Freedom’

By Gerry J. Gilmore, American Forces Press Service

SEOUL, South Korea, June 1, 2003 – U.S. soldiers and Marines deployed along the demilitarized zone separating North and South Korea “are on the front lines of freedom,” U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Paul D. Wolfowitz said June 1 during a visit to Camp Greaves – located a mile from the DMZ.

“The country is grateful for your service,” Wolfowitz told the 500 Army soldiers and Marines gathered inside the camp’s gymnasium. He noted that both President Bush and Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld “have asked me to send a message to you: that we appreciate what you’re doing — it is fantastic.”

Wolfowitz and his traveling party flew about 35 miles north of Seoul to visit with Camp Greaves’ service members. After meeting with 2nd Infantry Division commander Army Maj. Gen. John Wood, who has jurisdiction over the camp, Wolfowitz got together with the troops.

The deputy defense secretary said he was in South Korea “to update my own knowledge about the situation in this country and particularly about the defense issues we have with (South) Korea.”

Wolfowitz added he was slated to discuss mutual defense issues with South Korean President Roh Moo Hyun and other senior officials the next day in the capital city of Seoul.

Recalling the recent victory over Saddam Hussein’s forces in Iraq, Wolfowitz told the troops: “We have the best men and women anywhere in the world serving in our armed forces.”

American troops, he continued, “are brave, they’re professional, they fight joint, and they’re probably the most humane warriors any country has ever fielded.”

When U.S. and coalition troops were defeating Hussein’s forces in Iraq, Wolfowitz noted, other American troops stationed along the DMZ “were preventing a war here in Korea.”

It requires skill, dedication and professionalism to serve along the DMZ, he asserted.

Army Pfc. Corey Brown, 21, an artillery fire support specialist from Tucson, Ariz., said he volunteered to serve near the DMZ. He explained that his cousin, an Army staff sergeant, told him the DMZ “was the best place to come to learn your job.” Brown, assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 17th Field Artillery Regiment, noted that his cousin was right.

Army 2nd Lt. Mike Murphy, 22, a fire support officer in Brown’s outfit, declared that duty along the DMZ has a special meaning.

U.S. and South Korean troops

the deputy defense secre-

However, North Korea’s behavior

earlier this year, he continued, the

the deputy defense secretary noted.

It’s evident that North Korea is “a state that has little regard for the commitments it undertakes,” Wolfowitz said at the conference, “or for the delicate nature of the northeast Asia security environment.”

Regarding North Korea’s desire to deal exclusively with America in discussing its nuclear program,
Wolfowitz declared in Singapore:
“This is not and cannot be a bilateral issue, as Pyongyang would like it – limited to a two-way dialogue between North Korea and the United States.”

North Korea’s nuclear program “affects the whole region,” the deputy defense secretary observed at the conference, noting the issue therefore “requires a multilateral approach.”

North Korea is “heading down a blind alley” in its pursuit of nuclear and other weapons, Wolfowitz asserted at Camp Greaves, a point
he had made also in Singapore.
The United States, Japan, South
Korea, China and Russia, he has often reminded audiences, all strongly oppose nuclear weapons on the Korean Peninsula.

Meanwhile, Wolfowitz told Camp
Greaves’ troops that the United States and South Korea rely on them to keep the peace by deterring possible North Korean aggression.

“I thank you for your service. I thank you for your dedication,” Wolfowitz told the troops. “Keep it up. Both our countries depend on you and I’m glad to be here this afternoon to say that,” he concluded.

Wolfowitz pointed out to Singapore conference attendees that in October 2002 North Korea had declared it had violated and would continue to violate its prom-isne not to press on with its ura-ium-enrichment programs. And earlier this year, he continued, the closing ceremonies at the Korean War Veterans Memorial; and, other activities of the three days of events.

whites, African-Americans, Asians, American Indians and Hispanics.

One Marine carries an ammunition case about the size of a lunch box and a tripod on his shoulder.

The airman, wearing a fur hat, is the only one not wearing a helmet. There’s also a statue of an African-American Army medic and a South Korean soldier fighting with the American unit.

Previous U.S. stamps have recognized the bravery of Korean War veterans and the significance of the Korean War in U.S. and world history. In 1985, the Postal Service issued the 22-cent “Veterans Korea” stamp. “The Korean War,” a 33-cent stamp, was issued as part of the 1950s, and the “Celebrate the Century” stamp pane in 1999.

Congress authorized the building of the Korean War Veterans Memorial in 1986 and it was dedicated on July 27, 1995.

Shown marching in a wedge formation as if on patrol, the statues represent troops walking grimly through a triangular field of juniper bushes and marble barriers that symbolize the rough terrain in Korea. Their objective, at the apex of the triangular “field of service,” is symbolized by a masted American flag. The figures are clad in wind-blown ponchos to recall the harsh weather troops endured during the three-year war – 1950 to 1953.

The 19 statues reflect off a shiny, 164-foot-long black granite wall. A computer-controlled sandblaster etched the wall’s 41 panels, creating a mural of more than 2,500 images of U.S. personnel who supported combat troops. The etchings represent Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force and Coast Guard personnel. Equipment etchings include everything from rocket launchers, vehicles and tankers, to hospital units, to chaplains of all denominations and switchboard and radio operators.

Faces etched into the wall came from photographs in the National Archives and the National Air and Space Museum. Some of the people whose images were used are still alive.

The reflective quality of the granite creates the illusion of 38 statues, symbolic of the 38th Parallel and the 38 months of the war. When viewed from afar, it also creates the appearance of the mountain ranges of Korea.

The third element of the Korean War Veterans Memorial, an area of remembrance, consists of a circular reflecting pool at the apex surrounded by a grove of 40 Linden trees. “Freedom Is Not Free” is engraved on the segment of the wall that extends into the pool area.

The memorial recognizes the contributions of more than 1.5 million Americans who served in Korea during the war. It also acknowledges the United Nations member countries that assisted South Korea in the conflict.

The Pool of Remembrance bears the inscription: “Our nation honors her sons and daughters who answered the call to defend a country they never knew and a people they never met.”

The Korean War began on June 25, 1950, when North Korean communist troops invaded South Korea. The U.S. and 21 other nations rallied to the defense of South Korea with military personnel, medical support and supplies. More than 34,000 Americans had been killed and another 103,000 wounded when an armistice was signed on July 27, 1953.

More than 3,000 soldiers from other United Nations countries were killed and 16,000 were wounded. South Korean casualties vary greatly, with estimates ranging from 50,000 to more than 400,000 dead and hundreds of thousands wounded. Millions of civilians are thought to have been killed or wounded.

John W. Alli of Catonsville, MD, took the photograph on the stamp just before a snowstorm in January 1996. Alli, who served two tours of duty in the Persian Gulf as a Marine Corps second lieutenant, is now a commercial airline pilot and a lieutenant colonel aviator in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve.

Brothers Die in Same Korean War Action

By Art Lajeunesse

Last year while reading the “Knickerbocker News” (Former local newspaper) on microfiche for August 1951, I copied an article about two brothers Killed in Action at the same time and in the same unit. The brothers were PFC John R. and Melvin H. Barnett from Batesville, Arkansas. It stated that they were the only brothers that were Killed in Action, the same day, same time and the same unit possibly by fragments of the same mortar round. John and Melvin served in the heavy weapons company, 5th. Cav. Rgt. 1st. Cav. Div. Last month I sent email to the Arkansas State Library to see if I could get more information or copies of local newspaper articles about these brothers. The librarian sent me some copies of articles and I was put in contact with a family member.

John R. Barnett was born September 1, 1931 and Melvin H. Barnett was born July 9, 1930 in Batesville, Arkansas. Their parents George and Corly Barnett had seven sons and six daughters. Corly died January 6, 1949. Melvin enlisted September 16, 1948 and trained at Fort Ord, Ca. and Fort Benning, Ga. On December 3, 1949 Melvin was married to Miss Maude Lynn Alton.

John R. Barnett enlisted October 11, 1948 and trained at Camp Chaffee, Arkansas. Both brothers went overseas about the same time but in different units and this was in August 1, 1950. John was wounded while on patrol and received the Bronze Star and Purple Heart. After receiving these awards he requested a transfer to his brother Melvin’s unit, heavy weapons company, 5th. Cav. Rgt. 1st. Cav. Div. and was transferred to this unit.

Together they wrote their last letter home on March 15, 1951. It told among other things how John had given Melvin his first hair cut in five months. John and Melvin were Killed in Action the next day, March 16, 1951 and possibly from fragments from the same mortar round. Their father George Barnett received two telegrams one for John and one for Melvin, stating they were Killed in Action.

A brother Louis Barnett who was in the process of being deployed overseas with the Army at that time, was ordered state side duty. They were returned to their native Arkansas soil, and buried side by side in the Sandtown Cemetery.

74th Ordnance Battalion

On May 18-20, 2003, at Pocono Manor, Pocono Manor, PA, a group of buddies who served together in the U. S. Army and in Korea, attended a forty-five years reunion. It was the first time most had seen each other since leaving Korea in the fall of 1958. The men served with the 74th Ordnance Battalion in Ascom City and Uijongbu, and the 181st Signal Company in Ascom City. Plans are to make this an annual event.

73rd Tankers Association

The 11th Engineer (C) Battalion Association held their 10th annual reunion at the Boardwalk Hotel in Las Vegas, NV on September 26-30, 2002. Attending were 31 members, 23 wives and 19 guests, a total of 73. Included were 3 former members of the 11th in Panama, Noah Bass (1938-40), Bob Tippett (1940-43) and Leonard Hartman who also joined the unit in 1940 and served as the Battalion XO in Europe during WWII. Member Ira Greenberg also served with the 11th in Europe. A total of 20 states were represented with New Jersey at 8, Washington at 7 and Texas with 6. The 11th Engineer Association will hold the 11th Reunion in Peoria, IL, October 3rd thru the 5th. THE SIEGE OF WONSAN

By Lt. John P. Tanner USNR (Ret.)

Wonsan, strategically located on Korea’s East coast in the Sea of Japan, was North Korea’s principal seaport at the start of the Korean War. The large 300 square mile harbor was naturally protected from storms and typhoons. Wonsan was ice-free in the Winter, unlike other ports to the North. Its anchorage had a mud bottom over good holding ground in six to eight fathoms of water.

The city of Wonsan in 1950 was a thriving and modern seaport. It was key rail center, road transportation hub, industrial complex and naval base. Wonsan’s population was about 100,000. Wonsan was the terminus of the cross-peninsular road and rail line to the North Korean capital of Pyongyang. It was a pivotal location for highways in all directions and for the North-South rail line. Wonsan’s principal industry was a huge petroleum refinery covering million square feet, with an annual capacity of close to two million barrels. The Korean Railroad Company maintained facilities in Wonsan for the construction repair and maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock.

Wonsan had first class port facilities. A large concrete wharf in the inner harbor was equipped with warehouses and railroad sidings, a forty ton traveling crane was also included. At both ends of the wharf were quays and piers for small vessels. The oil refinery had its own large pier. A huge fishing industry was also based in area around and centered in Wonsan.

These features and industries, as well as the importance of the harbor were factors that led the Navy to establish the longest siege in modern naval warfare. To lay siege to the inner harbor would require clearing the Wonsan minefields and capturing its islands. There was considerable risk in this because the harbor was land-locked and enemy gunfire from all sides could be expected. Also, the minefield was almost completely intact from when it was first laid in December, 1950. At that time some 3000 moored and magnetic ground mines were laid to prevent Allied landings at Wonsan after the breakout from the Pusan perimeter.

The advantages in besieging Wonsan, in holding its harbor and the capture of its islands seemed to outweigh the risks to be overcome. These advantages included forcing the North Koreans and Chinese to divert large numbers of troops to protect against a possible invasion, and Wonsan was an important transportation center, lying astride the main rail and road arteries between Northeast Korea and the frontlines. It was also the terminus of the only East-West railroad in North Korea. Naval gunfire could reek havoc with these transportation routes, and by holding the harbor, the best port in North Korea would be closed.

The first task was to sweep a path through the minefield. A small swept area allowed initial siege operations to begin with two destroyers and the light cruiser Manchester. The destroyers and cruiser bombarded the harbor’s military installations, but the swept channel was small and navigation so difficult that the two destroyers fired the bombardment at anchor. It was readily apparent that to conduct an effective siege, the swept channels through the minefields had to be enlarged and Wonsan’s harbor islands had to be captured or neutralized.

The first island captured was Sin-Do. After a two hour bombardment by destroyers and frigates, South Korean marines landed unopposed and secured the island. Sin-Do lying 4000 yards from Kalma Gak (see map), would provide a good observation post for spotting our naval gunfire and for observing train and truck traffic in the city.

The next island occupied was Yo-Do, the largest island. Yo-Do was the ideal for a base, and later a small airfield. Initially it was far enough out in the harbor to be safe from enemy guns, there was no resistance to the landing and occupation by South Korean marines. In all some seven harbor islands were occupied.

The most useful of the Wonsan harbor islands for the siege ships was the island of Hwangto-Do, one of the three islands used for the spotting of ship’s gunfire. The island only 3000 yards from shore, had an elevation of 160 feet and was closest to North Korean guns and mortars. It was also closest to the city of Wonsan and to the important road running Southward to the front. From the observation post atop the island spotters could look directly upon Wonsan, this road, the railroad and several important bridges.

A top priority was also to clear enemy minefields still remaining in Wonsan, and prevent the enemy from planting others. Minesweeping had to be continuous, in a single day the North Koreans could remine the swept areas using sampans. Even a small sampan could carry up to four mines. The minesweepers supported by destroyers were fired upon, the destroyers would retaliate. Also during the day’s patrol the destroyers would take on certain shore bombardment missions. This included lucrative targets spotted in Wonsan by the spotters, naval gunfire parties on the islands or aircraft.

From time to time the siege would be augmented by air strikes from Task Force 77, by heavy ship gun strikes, or LSMR.
rocket attacks. Heavy ship gun strikes were especially effective in silencing shore batteries and causing massive devastation in Wonsan itself. The sixteen inch guns of the battleships and the, eight inch guns of the heavy cruisers were accurate and deadly. Gun emplacements, bridges, railroad marshaling yards, factories, locomotives, railroad cars, tunnels, trucks and troop concentrations were the targets.

As time went on the enemy shore defense system in Wonsan was steadily strengthened. As Navy minesweepers swept ever closer to shore, the North Korean entrenchment’s were expanded to include the beaches nearest the swept areas and at other locations where the enemy thought Allied Forces might land. Shore batteries were placed so as to cover both the ship operating areas and to sweep potential landing sites.

All harbor guns were of field artillery type, as distinguished from naval or regular fixed shore defense guns. With few exceptions, these guns were hidden in caves or tunnels, cleverly camouflaged, and were rolled out for firing and rolled back inside for protection. The North Koreans soon learned that an exposed gun was a destroyed gun. In addition to field artillery pieces, tank guns and rail-mounted guns were used against our siege ships. In spite of this, damage to our ships and island installations were surprisingly small.

A heavy gunstrike by surface forces including the battleship New Jersey and heavy cruiser Toledo pounded Wonsan targets on 2 July, 1951. The first coordinated air-strike struck Wonsan targets on 18 September, 1951 and included the heavy cruiser Toledo and five destroyers. The same ships repeated the bombardment the next day joined by three rocket ships. The air-gun bombardment was repeated on 10 October, 1951 by the British cruiser Belfast, five destroyers and a light Australian aircraft carrier. A heavy bombardment led by the battleship Wisconsin struck Wonsan on 20 December, 1951.

Heavy air-gunstrikes continued throughout 1952 and included the battleships, heavy and light cruisers and destroyers. The third year of the siege, 1953 saw continued air-gunstrikes and increased enemy-counter battery fire. Whenever Navy personnel on the harbor islands received word that a heavy ship was coming in for a bombardment of Wonsan, they would meet the ship in the outer channel and provide the latest target information gathered from spotters, and assist in plotting the exact coordinates. This ensured that the bombardment would do maximum damage.

The siege of Wonsan ended on the last day of the Korean War, 27 July, 1953. The final shots were fired by the heavy cruiser Bremerton. (See photo). The siege of Wonsan demonstrated the effectiveness of naval gunfire. This important rail and highway center, with its many industries, once a city of 100,000 and now half that size was a mass of ruins. The siege had tied down up to 60,000 North Korean and Chinese troops to prevent a possible landing by Allied Forces. These were troops which otherwise would have been fighting in the front lines to the South.

In a landlocked harbor which had been heavily mined and which the enemy had sought constantly to re-mine, where shallow, shoal-filled waters abounded, and despite the most intense enemy opposition, a siege of 861 days had been imposed with skill, determination and success by a tireless and efficient Navy team.

Korean War Veterans Certificate

The beautiful, full color 11" x 17" certificate pictured on the right is now available. It is produced on parchment-like stock.

A special certificate is available to family members of those who made the Supreme Sacrifice in the Korean War or who died of wounds received. The individual request should have the date of death and place and be certified by the requester.

Veterans who want to have a certificate made up for the spouse or descendant of a fallen buddy and can certify to the event, may do so. Multiple copies of the same certificate can be ordered if you have a number of children/grandchildren. You may order certificates to give to members of your unit or provide them with an order form.

Please be sure all information is printed clearly or typed and include your serial number and unit designation while in Korea. In some instances, it may be necessary to abbreviate. Begin your unit designation with the smallest designation and list to the largest.

The certificate will be shipped rolled in a protective mailing tube and total cost is $20.00 paid in advance. This beautiful certificate can be framed in a 16" x 20" frame with appropriate matting, mounted on a 12" x 18" placard or a walnut plaque.

Certificate Order Form

☐ I certify that I served honorably in the U.S. Armed Forces in Korea (9/3/45 to present – if not during above period.)

He Deserved More

By Richard F. Lauer

On page 86 of the April 2001 issue of the Retired Officers Magazine there is a simple entry in a monthly article called “Sounding Taps”. The entry read, “Russell, Frank, LTC (KY)”. What a small legacy for a man who showed so much courage during the Korean War. That entire April issue could have been a tribute to him. Frank Russell, a warrior extraordinaire, is dead and 17 letters in the Army section of Taps attests to his death. Well, it’s not enough! He should go out in a blaze of glory. It should have been announced on the 6 pm news and again at 11 pm. A soldier is dead, a true soldier of the “Old School”. He was my friend and my leader. He was my second Company commander in combat; the first being retired LT Gen. Sidney Berry.

We all had an appointment with destiny of April 23, 1951. What a monument to his memory that Captain Russell would die in April 2001, 50 years after that 1951 date. B Co 35th RCT was the only thing between the Chinese spring offensive and the 35th RCT Hq. We were deployed in blocking position for our battalion and my platoon in company revenue. Our back was to the Hantan River.

On the afternoon of April 22, the Chinese began to probe our front. All platoon leaders were tied in with the Co C.P. by powered telephones. An all out attack began in late afternoon with the Chinese committing 27 divisions (about 250,000 troops) across a 40-mile front. When they saw our two online platoons I could hear our guys talking to the company CP, first lieutenant Melvin C. Walthall reported that they were coming so fast our soldiers didn’t have time to reload. The CCF were jumping into our foxholes as other vehicles all-burning. Many were turned over on their sides. By now it was completely dark, but in the glare of the fires, I could see someone running toward us. We will run up to the river, shoot up the quad 50s, and turn around and run back.” I was ordered to take the Company and continue south on the road.

As we approached the Regimental C.P., I could hear burp guns and grenades going off, and I could see tents and ambulances as well as other vehicles all-burning. Many were turned over on their sides. By now it was completely dark, but in the glare of the fires, I could see someone running toward us. It was Sid Berry, who at that time was a Major and the Regimental S-3. In the darkness he called, “Who’s there?” I replied, “Lauer, Sir, B-Company”. I told him that Captain Russell had taken two tanks and gone back to the river to destroy the quad 50s. The tank platoon leader requested Infantry support and Russell said, “There is no time. I will ride on the outside of your tank and guide you. We will run up to the river, shoot up the quad 50s, and turn around and run back.” I was ordered to take the Company and continue south on the road.

Russell called me and said our two front line platoons had pulled out and were now in the assembly area south of the Han Tan. He ordered me to withdraw and join him in the assembly area. I called the quad 50 section sergeant and told him to withdraw. I said that I couldn’t go with them. The Chinese had already set up machine guns to our south. To avoid being slaughtered, I had to take the platoon cross-country. He said, “Don’t worry Sir. I think we can shoot our way through.” He took his 2 tracks and started down the road. I took my guys and started over the hills to where I knew there was a ford in the river.

We arrived safely in the assembly where Frank Russell was waiting for us. He asked me where the quad 50s were and I told him that they were coming down the road, and that I came cross-country. In a short time the crews of the two tracks came hot footing into the assembly area. Russell asked where the vehicles were, and the Sergeant replied that they were in the middle of the river and that the Chinese were swarming all over them, trying to get the guns into battery. Russell asked why they didn’t destroy them, and the Sergeant replied that there wasn’t enough time. There were two tanks parked by, and Russell ran over to the tank platoon leader and ordered him to crank up the tanks. He said that they were going back to the river to destroy the quad 50s. The tank platoon leader requested Infantry support and Russell said, “There is no time. I will ride on the outside of your tank and guide you. We will run up to the river, shoot up the quad 50s, and turn around and run back.” I was ordered to take the Company and continue south on the road.

As we approached the Regimental C.P., I could hear burp guns and grenades going off, and I could see tents and ambulances as well as other vehicles all-burning. Many were turned over on their sides. By now it was completely dark, but in the glare of the fires, I could see someone running toward us. It was Sid Berry, who at that time was a Major and the Regimental S-3. In the darkness he called, “Who’s there?” I replied, “Lauer, Sir, B-Company”. I told him that Captain Russell had taken two tanks and gone back to the river to destroy the two tracks. Major Berry told me that the twenty-fourth infantry had withdrawn and left our right flank exposed. The Chinese came down the MSR and attacked the Regimental C.P. They machine gunned our wounded and set our ambulances on fire. He told me that Lieutenant Charlie Walz, a West Point graduate and an A Co. platoon leader was trying to clear the ridge that paralleled the road. The Chinese on the ridge were throwing grenades and calling in English “No rotation for you GI!” Major Berry instructed me to take two tanks and go down the road to where the Chinese had set up a roadblock. He said, “When you reach the roadblock, shoot your way through. Don’t let anything stop you.” We broke through the roadblock at dawn, and passed through the Turks lines.

I believe that Frank Russell was recommended for a DSC for destroying the two quad 50s. I was informed later that it was never awarded to him. In my mind’s eye I can look back fifty years and see Frank Russell emerge from his tent to brief his platoon leaders on the day’s plans. In a typhoon, rain so heavy you couldn’t see fifty feet, he would look around and say to his platoon leaders, “Not much of a day for the air force, but perfect infantry weather.”

Goodbye Captain Russell. It was an honor serving with you.

North Korean Army and vice premier of the Communist regime. Assisting him were four other officers with both political and military experience, including Major General Lee Sang Cho, chief of the Reconnaissance Bureau of the North Korean Army and a former vice minister of commerce, and Major General Hsieh Fang, chief of propaganda of the Northeast Military District of China. According to many U.N.C. observers, Hsieh directed the Communist truce operations at Kaesong.

It took two weeks just to hammer out an agenda, as the Communists tried unsuccessfully to incorporate the restoration of the 38th Parallel and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korea. When they met firm resistance from the U.N.C. delegation, they finally settled for consideration of four major topics: establishment of a military demarcation line and a demilitarized zone; arrangements for the setting up of a supervisory organization to make sure that the terms of the Armistice were carried out; disposition of prisoners of war (POWs); and recommendations to the concerned governments regarding follow-up actions after the truce was in operation. Each of these topics was assigned to a subcommittee so that negotiations could proceed concurrently rather than serially.

The U.N.C. team discovered at the outset that the Communists were hard bargainers, yet highly sensitive to matters of tradition, protocol and equality. Any effort or seeming effort by the U.N.C. delegation to demonstrate superiority of any kind was swiftly countered by the Communists, since the matter of preserving “face” was of major importance in the Orient. When the U.N.C. members brought in a small U.N.C. flag and stand to the meetings, the Communists responded with a larger flag and stand. The construction of modest sanitation facilities at the truce site for the U.N.C. staff was quickly followed by the erection of a larger facility for the Communists that was brightly painted and landscaped as well. Joy, the senior U.N.C. delegate, had a sedan to transport him to the conference building, the Communists imported a vehicle from the Soviet Union so that Nam could arrive in similar style.

As the meetings that followed the settlement of the agenda got underway, the U.N.C. delegation also found out that the Communists would use any tactic that would gain them an advantage. Bluster, rudeness and profanity were a familiar part of the Communists arsenal when they wished to hector the opposition and secure concessions. Since few of the U.N.C. staff members understood either Korean or Chinese, the rough words and insults lost much of their impact when they were later translated into English. On the other hand, the Communists could shift overnight from harsh, browbeating, name-calling attacks to quiet, reasonable and businesslike approaches when they had determined that they could secure no more concessions on an issue and were ready to settle the matter.

The U.N.C. team also discovered that the Communists were experienced and strong on substantive issues, but less rigid about procedural matters. In the latter area, the U.N.C. staff members found that the Communists would never accept any of their proposals in toto; they deliberately would insert an error into a proposed agreement for the Communists to find, confident that their counterparts would probably leave the rest of the text alone.

The enemy staff members, on the other hand, were tough negotiators throughout the lengthy discussions and regarded any effort on the part of the U.N.C. team to reach quick compromises with suspicion. Every concession had to be matched by a demand for a similar Communist concession. The Communists understood and respected the principles of horse trading; gift horses were always looked in the mouth.

One favorite Communist technique was to let the U.N.C. make the first proposals. By out waiting their opponents, the Communists could accept the portions favorable to their position and haggle for more. Eventually, when they saw that the U.N.C. would not yield further, they would bring forth their counter offer. In the debates that ensued, the Communists revealed a consistent pattern of response; as long as they continued to argue a point, the door was still open to trading, but when they refused to discuss the matter any further, they had arrived at their final position. The key attributes in dealing with the Communists, the U.N.C. delegation soon came to realize, were calmness, firmness and patience.

Shortly after the truce discussions began, charges of violations of the Kaesong Conference area surfaced and continued to hamper efforts to reach substantive agreements throughout the next two years. The first serious occurrence took place August 4, when a company of fully-armed Communist troops marched through the conference site and the U.N.C. delegation promptly suspended the negotiations for five days until assurances were received that there would be no further recurrence of such blatant violations. Shocked by the strong U.N.C. action and the attendant unfavorable publicity that it garnered in the world press, the Communists launched a flood of protests in the succeeding days and culminated their counteroffensive August 23.

Claiming that a U.N.C. plane had bombed the conference site, they rejected the U.N.C. refutation of the charge and declared an indefinite suspension of the talks. Although the liaison officers continued to meet in the interim to discuss changing the site of the talks from Kaesong to Panmunjom, a village about five miles west of Kaesong, and rules and regulations that would reduce violations in the future, the plenary sessions did not resume until October.

In the meantime, the Communists had strengthened their forces and built up their military supplies in North Korea. With the possibility of an Armistice in the near future, there appeared to be little reason for the U.N.C. to mount offensives for objectives that might later have to be surrendered when a settlement was reached. But General James Van Fleet, the Eighth Army commander, became concerned that his troops had lost their edge during the early summer period of inactivity at the front and decided to carry out limited attacks to straighten out sags in the U.N.C.’s defensive lines, maintain pressure on the enemy, and keep his troops in combat condition.

In late July, Van Fleet mounted the first offensive action since the truce talks had started in the area known as the Punchbowl located about 20 miles northeast of the Hwachon Reservoir. Using the U.S. 2nd Infantry Division as the main attack force, the U.N.C. won a foothold in the area in July and then, in August, broadened the attack to include Bloody and Heartbreak Ridges, located about four miles west of the Punchbowl. The U.S. 1st Marine Division and elements of the ROK 7th, 8th, 11th and Capital Divisions joined the assault to wrest the fiercely defended terrain from the Communists during the ensuing two months. When the U.N.C. troops concluded the successful attacks in mid-October, the cost in casualties was high, with the U.S. 2nd Division alone suffering more than 6,000 during the offensive.

Determined to sustain pressure on the enemy, Van Fleet also conducted a modest advance of about six miles on a line roughly from Munsan-ni on the west to Kumsong in the central sector of the front. Three U.S. divisions—the 1st Cavalry, 3rd Infantry and 25th Infantry—the British 1st Commonwealth Division, and the ROK 1st Division participated in this offensive during October and removed this salient in the line. Communist resistance was again intense and the 1st Cavalry Division took more than 2,900 of the 4,000 casualties suffered by the U.N.C. forces in the advance.

But the punishing “elbowing forward” tactics of the Eighth Army had given the U.N.C. the battlefield initiative and kept the enemy off balance as well as inflicting thousands of casualties on the Communist combat units. The limited offensives at the front coupled with U.N.C. air and naval attacks helped persuade the enemy to resume the truce talks in October.

When the plenary session resumed at the new conference site at Panmunjom October 25, the delegates began to iron out their differences on Item 2, the military demarcation line and the demilitarized zone. Before the talks had broken off, the Communists had worked diligently for the restoration of the 38th Parallel as the military demarcation line and the U.N.C. had firmly rejected all attempts to consider a return to the old boundary line. In an effort to shake the Communist stand, Joy had offered a novel approach to solving that problem. Since the U.N.C. controlled the sea and the air over Korea, he had contended that the enemy should compensate the U.N.C. for giving up its sea and air superiority by surrendering additional land territory at the front. Joy’s proposal to break up the overall military power into component parts and give them separate values for bargaining purposes was an interesting gamble, but it had met with swift and rude rejection by the Communists. Nam Il had maintained that the current battle lines reflected the concentrated expression of the total military effectiveness of the U.N.C. land, sea and air forces. When Joy had pointed out that Japan had been defeated in World War II without a single enemy soldier setting foot on the home islands, Nam had even derided the claim that the United States had vanquished Japan at all and had insisted that the entry of the Soviet Union into the war had provided the crushing blow. Nevertheless, the Joy proposal did provide a trade-off in settling the differences between the two sides over the military demarcation line when the October sessions began.

The Communist spurning of the U.N.C. offers to trade territory and the U.N.C. refusal to talk about the 38th Parallel finally led the conferees to accept the current battle line as the line of demarcation November 27. The line dipped south of the 38th Parallel in the west and arced north in the east. The Communist insistence on completing the work on the line of demarcation before taking up the other three agenda items aroused Ridgway’s suspicions. Although the U.N.C. insisted that the line would only be valid for 30 days, it soon became apparent that the enemy intended to make the line a permanent rather than a temporary arrangement, and had, in effect, gained a de facto cease-fire, as Ridgway had predicted. Almost immediately, military operations slowed down and the Communists showed no disposition to reach swift agreement on the remaining items before the 30-day limit expired.

Debate on Item 3—the establishment of a supervisory organization to ensure that both sides complied with the terms of the Armistice—got underway in December 1951. After preliminary skirmishing, three basic questions emerged: Who would carry out the inspections behind the lines to report on violations? How much inspection would be permitted? Would the rehabilitation or construction of airfields be allowed during the Armistice?

Although the Communists eventually suggested that neutral nations be named to do the inspecting, they ran into adamant opposition when they tried to designate the Soviet Union as one of their choices. Considering the major role the Soviet Union had played in supporting the North Korean and Communist Chinese military effort, the U.N.C. refused to accept the U.S.S.R. as part of a neutral nation supervisory organization.

On the question of inspection, which the Communists traditionally had opposed in the past, it was the U.N.C., surprisingly enough, that proposed to limit neutral inspection teams to selected ports of entry and centers of communication. Ridgway maintained that the Communists would probably exploit the privilege of unlimited inspection for intelligence purposes and held that the neutral inspection teams... could adequately check on the arrivals and departures of men and material. Since the Communists were willing to accept limited inspection, the discussions settled down to the designation of the number and location of the inspection points.

The second major stumbling block on Item 3 arose when the U.N.C. insisted that there should be no rehabilitation or construction of airfields during the Armistice. Both Ridgway and Joy contended that the enemy should not be allowed to take advantage of the truce to strengthen its air potential in North Korea. But the Communists rejected all efforts to place restrictions on airfields just as resolutely as the U.N.C. resisted Communist attempts to name the Soviet Union as a neutral nation.

With the major differences on Item 3 reduced to two, compromise again was reached. Poland and Czechoslovakia became the Communists’ nominees for the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, and Sweden and Switzerland were the choices by the U.N.C. delegation to complete the membership of that group. Now that the Communists had dropped the Soviet Union from their list of candidates, the U.N.C. withdrew its insistence on airfield restrictions.

Final agreement on Item 3 also included the acceptance of 20 neutral-nation teams to carry out the inspections, with 10 to be assigned to five ports of entry on each side. Replacement of materiel was to be on a one-for-one basis only and no more than 35,000 troops were to be rotated in any one month, again on a one-for-one basis. To handle all violations of the truce and the supervision and administration of the demilitarized zone, the negotiators established a Military Armistice Commission that would operate out of Panmunjom.

While arrangements for Item 3 were still underway, the opening discussions on Item 4, the repatriation of prisoners of war, took place. Although neither the United States nor North Korea had ratified the Geneva Convention of 1949 on prisoners of war, both had agreed to abide by its stipulations. Since Article 118 of the Convention clearly stated that all prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay at the end of hostilities, there appeared to be little room for dispute. Yet difficulties arose at the outset on the exchange of prisoners and steadily mounted as the issue became burdened with fundamentally divisive elements. A series of conflicts broke out between the rights of the individual and those of the majority, between legal rights and human rights, and between humanitarianism and Communist pride.

The first evidence of trouble appeared just before Christmas 1951, when the two sides exchanged lists of prisoners of war. The U.N.C. rosters contained the names of 132,000 prisoners of war in addition to another 37,000 recently reclassified as civilian internees. Since the Communists claimed that they were missing about 188,000 personnel, the U.N.C. holdings represented about 90 percent of the Communist total. On the other hand, the Communist list contained only about 11,500 names—7,100 South Koreans and 4,400 U.N. personnel—despite their claim that they had taken 65,000 prisoners and the U.N.C. listing 88,000 South Koreans and 11,500 U.S. troops as missing in action. The Communist list, therefore, comprised only about 12 percent of the U.N.C. total, a remarkable disparity.

Pressed to explain the great difference between the two totals, the Communists maintained that their lists were small because they had “re-educated” and released thousands of prisoners at the front. They strongly denied that they had impressed large numbers of former South Korean military personnel into their armed forces. In addition, they decried the U.N.C. practice of screening prisoners and reclassifying them as civilian internees those reportedly impressed into North Korea’s military forces.

During the early discussions on prisoners of war in late 1951, no mention was made about the principles of voluntary or forced repatriation. Army staff officers in Washington had pointed out in mid-1951 that there were many Chinese prisoners of war who had formerly served in the forces of Chiang Kai-shek, and that they and others who had demonstrated anti-Communist attitudes in the U.N.C. prisoner of war camps would likely be severely punished if they were returned to Communist control. The possibility of offering such prisoners a choice would be not only humanitarian, but also presented interesting psychological warfare opportunities. Although the concept appealed to Ridgway, he pointed out that once the United States openly advocated such a principle, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to abandon it.

Since Ridgway’s first concern was the quick and safe return of all the prisoners held by the Communists, he was reluctant to espouse any policy that might endanger their release. On the other hand, he was willing to try a gambit that might work. If the Communists would consent to a one-for-one exchange, the U.N.C. could withhold all prisoners unwilling to return to Communist control until all of the U.N.C. prisoners of war had been exchanged and then could let the remaining detainees exercise an option. The enemy negotiators, however, quickly extinguished any hopes for a one-for-one exchange and insisted firmly on an all-for-all settlement.

Blocked by the Communists on this score, the U.N.C. delegates tried another tack in the closing days of 1951, and in the process, became committed to the principle of voluntary repatriation. They proposed to accept the Communist concept that a soldier captured could upon release choose whether to return to his own army or to join the other side. Since the Communists had admitted that they had “re-educated” and released thousands of prisoners during the early stages of the war, they had already practiced “voluntary repatriation” and the U.N.C. advocated the adoption of this policy by both sides as a means of assuring that all prisoners would be treated equitably.

When the Communists reacted vehemently to the use of their own practices, Admiral Ruthven Libby, who had replaced Burke on the delegation, solicitously reminded them that the Chinese troops, according to the enemy’s own avowals, were all simply volunteers eager to fight for the Korean People’s Army. If this were true, he could not understand why the Communists were worried about any of their volunteers not wanting to go home. But General Lee Sang Cho, his Communist counterpart, refused to rise to the bait and even denied any incongruities in the Communists’ earlier and current positions on voluntary repatriation. Lee, however, did recognize the somewhat distorted logic in his arguments. At one of the January meetings, while defending the Communist system of prisoner education and calling it righteous and benevolent, he became so convulsed with suppressed laughter that he could scarcely complete his remarks.

During the talks that took place in February and March 1952, the Communists remained adamantly opposed to voluntary repatriation. Their hatred of Chiang Kai-shek and fear that Chinese prisoners of war might be sent to Taiwan if not repatriated were clearly expressed in the staff meetings. Although they refused to yield on voluntary repatriation for former North Korean and Chinese soldiers, they did evidence a softer attitude on personnel who had lived in South Korea. One of the main problems at this point was that neither side had any firm idea about how many of the prisoners held by the U.N.C. would refuse repatriation since no real screening had been carried out.

An estimate based on guesswork made in February by the U.N.C. staff assumed that of the 132,000 in its custody, about 28,000 would not want to go home, but only 16,000 would resist repatriation. It also assumed that about half of the 20,000 Chinese prisoners would forcibly resist repatriation, since they were well-organized and led by leaders with strong pro Chiang Kai-shek sympathies. Although the guess that 116,000 of the 132,000 would probably agree to repatriation had no basis in fact, it became critical in early April, when the Communists demonstrated an interest in securing a firm estimate of how many prisoners would be returned. Lacking any accurate figures, the U.N.C. staff officers indicated that about 116,000 military repatriates would be involved in an exchange. Citing this figure may have been a tactical error on the part of the U.N.C., since the Communists accepted it as an approximate total and were led to believe that they would recover about that number of prisoners. The enemy delegation quickly suggested that both sides check their lists to secure firm figures with the evident expectation that no more than 16,000 of their captured personnel would elect to remain under U.N.C. control.

Although the U.N.C. teams, sought to persuade as many of the prisoners as possible to return home during the April screening period, the final results astounded both sides. Only about 70,000 of the military prisoners indicated that they would consent to repatriation without the use of force. Significantly, only a little more than 6,000 of the more than 20,000 Chinese prisoners were included in the 70,000. The Communists’ first reaction to this disclosure was profound shock, swiftly followed by bitter anger. They felt that they had been deliberately deceived by the U.N.C. for propaganda purposes. With the Communists deeply resentful, exchanges at the truce talks became acrimonious and little progress was made. The U.N.C. offer to swap the 70,000 prisoners for the 12,000 that the Communists held was coldly rejected at the end of April. The Communists wanted at least 116,000 returned and were especially concerned about the low total of Chinese repatriates.

The enemy secured fresh ammunition for their attacks on voluntary repatriation in May 1952, when violence erupted in the U.N.C. prisoner of war camps on the island of Koje-do, off the southern coast of South Korea. Communist prisoners seized the U.N.C. camp commander and used him to bargain both for concessions and for damaging admissions that the prisoners had been treated inhumanely and had been subjected to forcible screening. Although these concessions were given under duress, the enemy was able to gain the propaganda initiative during the summer of 1952.

In the process of restoring order in the prisoner of war camps after this incident, the U.N.C. carried out a more thorough screening and segregated all the prisoners desiring repatriation from those who wished to stay. By including civilian internees and South Koreans who wanted to go to North Korea, the new total came to about 83,000. When the U.N.C. submitted the revised figures to the Communists in July, however, they were again rejected.

The enemy continued to insist on the return of higher numbers and made it increasingly clear that the Chinese prisoners were the real bone of contention.

With the negotiations stalled, both General Mark W. Clark, who had replaced Ridgway as U.N. commander, and Major General William K. Harrison, who had replaced Joy as chief U.N.C. negotiator in May, recommended that the U.N.C. present the Communists with several alternate proposals for the disposition of the nonrepatriates. Then if the Communists refused to accept any of them, the U.N.C. would suspend the truce talks. Such a course would demonstrate to the Communists that the U.N.C. had reached its final bargaining position.

President Harry S. Truman approved this action in September 1952, and on the 28th, Harrison offered the Communists three alternatives:

1. All prisoners would be brought to the demilitarized zone and checked off by Red Cross or joint military teams. They could then choose whether to be repatriated or to remain in the control of the side that detained them;

2. All prisoners desiring repatriation would be exchanged expeditiously. All nonrepatriates would be brought to the demilitarized zone in small groups and would be interviewed by teams from countries not involved in the war and could then elect repatriation or nonrepatriation;

3. All prisoners desiring repatriation would be exchanged as quickly as possible. All non-repatriates would then be brought to the demilitarized zone and freed. They could then go, without screening or interviews, to the side of their choice.

When the Communists turned down these proposals and continued to demand full repatriation, Harrison declared on October 8, that the meetings would be in recess until they accepted one of the U.N.C. proposals or offered a constructive one of their own. The talking stage had come to an end.

While the talks had been going on, combat at the front had been restricted in the main to limited attacks to maintain pressure on the enemy and to seize favorable terrain. Clark, like Ridgway, had no desire to incur large numbers of casualties to take objectives that might have to be given up when an Armistice was reached. Clark did authorize several larger-scale offensives to increase the pressure on the enemy after the truce talks went into recess, but the efforts to take the Triangle Hill complex north of Kunwha in October and November proved to be costly and the approach of winter discouraged further attempts to improve the U.N.C. battlefield positions.

Although the liaison officers continued to meet during the winter of 1952-53, they dealt mainly in complaints and alleged violations of the truce area and no progress was made in substantive matters. The advent of a Republican administration under President Dwight D. Eisenhower in January 1953, led to several attempts, including the veiled threat of the use of nuclear weapons, to increase the pressure on the enemy to end the conflict, but to little avail.

On March 5, however, Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin died unexpectedly and a thaw began in East–West relations as his successors sought to consolidate their power during the transition period that followed. Evidence of the change came in late March. In the previous month Clark had sent a routine letter to the North Korean and Chinese Communist commanders that requested the immediate evacuation of sick and wounded prisoners. Earlier attempts along this line had been fruitless and Clark held little hope that his suggestion would be accepted at that time. In the aftermath of Stalin’s death, the Communist military commanders, on March 28, not only accepted Clark’s offer on the sick and wounded, but also opened the door for further negotiations to settle the disposition of the other prisoners as well. Two days later, Chinese Foreign Minister Chou En-lai stated that both sides should hand over any prisoners who did not wish to be repatriated to a neutral nation for disposition and set the stage for the resumption of plenary talks in mid-April.

In the meantime, the liaison officers met April 6, to discuss the exchange of sick and wounded prisoners in a completely different and business-like atmosphere, free of recriminations and rhetoric. Lists were prepared and exchanged and arrangements were made for transporting the sick and wounded to Panmunjom for their transfer. Operation Little Switch, as it was called, took place on April 20, when the U.N.C. turned over 5,194 North Korean and 1,030 Chinese soldiers, plus 446 civilian internees, to the Communists, and received 684 sick and wounded soldiers, including 149 Americans, from the enemy.

The threat of an indecisive settlement of the conflict alarmed South Korean President Syngman Rhee and he mounted a strong campaign in opposition, vowing to continue the war alone if necessary. Since South Korea was in no position to wage a prolonged war without U.S. assistance, the South Korean speeches and demonstrations proved to be more embarrassing than deterrents. The U.N.C. and the Communists pushed ahead in the weeks after Little Switch to resolve the last remaining issues: who would take charge of the non-repatriates, how long would they be held, and what would be their final disposition if they could not be persuaded to return home?

Initially the U.N.C. preferred Switzerland as the chief custodial nation, but the Communists had turned that choice down and instead had pressed for India as the fifth member of a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission along with Switzerland, Sweden, Poland and Czechoslovakia. The U.N.C. had conceded on that issue, with the specification that India would provide all the military and administrative personnel to carry out the mission. On the other hand, the U.N.C. proved to be less amenable to the Communist proposal that the nonrepatriates be held for six months while the Communist teams sought to change their minds about returning home. After some debate, the negotiators worked out a compromise period of 90 days and also agreed that there would be no more than seven men to act as explainers or persuaders for each 1,000 non-repatriates. For those who continued to resist repatriation after 90 days, their fate would be considered at a political conference to be convened after the Armistice was signed. If the conference failed to resolve their disposition within 30 days, the non-repatriates would be declared civilians and be free to seek residence in another country.

As the conferees moved ever closer to a final agreement in May, South Korean agitation continued to increase. Since the non-repatriates would remain on South Korean soil during the period of explaining and Syngman Rhee opposed the selection of India as the chief custodial nation, a crisis threatened to develop unless some means could be found to reconcile the sharp differences between the United States and South Korea over the projected terms of the Armistice. Basic to the settlement of these differences was the need to dispel South Korean fears that the United States might desert it if hostilities broke out again after the Armistice was signed. Although the United States was reluctant to conclude a bilateral security pact while South Korean threats and pressures were in such open evidence, Eisenhower decided at the end of May to offer such a pact to Rhee in an effort to defuse the dangerous situation.

But Rhee had placed himself in an exposed political position by stirring up South Korean emotions to a high pitch and had to take some action before he accepted the U.S. offer. On June 18, South Korean forces guarding the prisoners of war permitted about 27,000 Korean non-repatriates to escape from their compounds; the majority of the escapees were quickly absorbed into the civilian population and were impossible to recover without South Korean cooperation. The unilateral action, although it caused an immediate uproar, did serve to relieve the pressure on Rhee to some degree and he became more responsive to U.S. arguments that the bilateral security pact would provide assurance of U.S. support in the future, and additionally that South Korea needed more time to expand and develop its armed forces. By early July, he agreed not to obstruct the implementation of the Armistice terms despite his continued misgivings over the long-term results.

The Communist reaction to Rhee’s release of the non-repatriates in the meantime had been surprisingly mild, although they had obviously relished the U.N.C. embarrassment over the incident. During May and June, while the final details of the truce were being worked out, they had carried out a series of offensives to improve their defensive positions along the eastern and central fronts and, in the process, to deal the South Korean units opposing them a telling blow. The heavy attacks, which did not peter out until mid-July, caused heavy casualties on both sides and may have had a sobering effect on Rhee’s bellicosity.

Although the U.N.C. could not guarantee Rhee’s full observance of the Armistice terms, the Communists were now ready to complete the agreement. A final demarcation line was drawn and last-minute arrangements for the transfer of prisoners, repatriates and non-repatriates was settled. On July 27, the plenary delegates met at Panmunjom and signed 18 copies of the truce agreement. Twelve hours later, the fighting came to an end.

Shortly after the Armistice was signed, the exchange of prisoners got under way. By September 6, the U.N.C. had sent more than 75,000 repatriates to the Communists and had received more than 12,000 from the enemy. On September 23, the U.N.C. followed up and delivered more than 22,000 non-repatriates to the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission in the demilitarized zone, and the Communists gave the Commission more than 350 U.N.C. non-repatriates. Communist efforts to persuade their non-repatriates to return during the 90 days granted them were largely unsuccessful and only about 600 chose to go back when the explaining period came to an end in December. The Korean non-repatriates were released in Korea and the Chinese were sent to Taiwan, with the exception of 86, who elected to go to India. As for U.N.C. non-repatriates, only 12 changed their mind; the remainder, including 21 Americans, were returned to Communist control in early 1954.

Since the war had never been declared, it was fitting that there should be no official ending, merely a suspension of hostilities. With the uncertainty of Syngman Rhee’s intentions casting a deep shadow over the truce agreement, how long it would last was a matter for conjecture.

Perhaps the major deterrent to renewal of the conflict was the high costs in manpower and economic resources required to continue the fighting. Estimates of enemy battle losses alone came to more than 1.5

This is my story about the 240 cannon fired the last 4 months of the War by the 213th and 159th Field Artillery Battalions, US Army. I served with the 213th and we were located in the Chorwon Valley in the Central Sector. In January 1953 our battalion had 155 howitzers and then to our surprise we received the (240) cannons in April 1953. Battalion had 3 firing batteries and I was with “Charlie” Battery. The 159th F.A. Bn covered the western half of the Korean Peninsula with their 6 (240) cannons. The 213th F.A. Bn was to cover the eastern half of the Peninsula. At one time we fired both the 240 cannons and 155 howitzers in May 1953. We eventually turned our 155 howitzers over to the South Korean Army.

The first week of June 1953 the 213th started to move to the east. “Able” Battery remained in the Chorwon Valley. “Baker” Battery moved with their 2 cannons over to the Kumwha Area and my “Charlie” Battery moved the furthest to the east 115 miles to locate NE of Yanggu and SW of the “Punch Bowl”. It was a challenging move for us with “Charlie” Battery that included a 10 day stop over in the Hwachon Reservoir Area. We fired the 240 cannon up to the Cease Fire on July 27, 1953. The 240 cannon had a 9 inch diameter tube and could fire a 360lb shell up to 14.3 miles. This tube itself was 22 feet long. All photos are the 213th F.A.-Bn-Btry “C”, Korea in 1953.

American warriors of yesterday and today have never failed to answer their nation’s call. Through selfless sacrifice, they have brought to the entire world a concept most often associated with American ideals - Freedom!

A precious word. A word with so many meanings, yet a word that clearly means “This is America!”

The poster reflects on the past and the present. The somber, black POW/MIA flag, a national symbol, is a firm reminder of those still missing, and of their families who have waited decades for answers. “You are not forgotten” reminds us that this nation’s work is not done. There are more than 88,000 warriors who still remain unaccounted-for from conflicts past. And still their families wait.

More than 140,000 Americans since World War I have endured the hardships of captivity as Prisoners of War. Their sacrifices must never be forgotten. This nation honors their names, their undying spirit and their memory on September 19, 2003.

The rippling red, white and blue banner, so clear and so proud through the smoke of battle, leads American warriors forward - toward freedom for oppressed peoples, toward freedom for those who know the word only because it means “America.”

But “Freedom” lies not on the battlefields where our POWs and MIAs have fought so valiantly. It lies in the hearts of the people of entire nations. It lies in ideals so richly American, and it rests on the shoulders of those who we honor on this special day. Freedom!
A Korean war story about 16 courageous men sent to blow up an ammunition dump at Inchon, South Korea, September 15, 1950. After a successful mission, the men failed to rendezvous with their rescue ship. When the United Nations forces landed later that morning, the men were caught in a murderous crossfire. They fled into the hills to avoid the retreating North Korean army.

The author/wife paints a graphic picture of raw survival as the men battle fear, the elements, and sometimes themselves trying to stay one step ahead of the communist forces without a radio or map to guide them.

The Golden Gate Bridge brings back memories

Special thanks to Mr. Doenges for his front cover photo of the Golden Gate Bridge the March-April issue. The bridge was coincidentally opened on this (27 May?) day in 1937.

In one of my life’s greatest moments, I passed under it aboard the General Collins in late November of 1953, returning from Korea to my family home across the bay in Oakland, to a wife I had not seen for a year and a 6 months old son I hadn’t seen at all.

In the 50 years since I have not seen a picture, nor on rare occasions passed within sight of it, without the memory of that day coming instantly to mind. The bridge is a monument for me, and I hope there are many others who can share the feeling.

A great hero remembered, he was our Chaplain

Mother’s Day - on a beautiful windswept hill in western Pennsylvania an American hero was laid to rest. Col. Logan E. Weston, age 89, known to his men as “The Fighting Preacher”, chose the beautiful rolling hills of his childhood as his final resting place. “Arlington? That’s for heroes, I’m just a country boy, take me back to the farm.” Humble words from a man who was possibly the most decorated soldier in American history. His 28 year military career from Private to Colonel showed an exemplary service and leadership in keeping with the highest traditions of our military service.

Veteran of World War II, the Korean War, and the build-up of the Vietnam war, he was shot and seriously wounded several times in over 48 battles and countless skirmishes. Logan Weston was one of America’s most decorated soldiers with more than 200 medals, ribbons and awards. His military citations include the Distinguished Service Cross; The Legion of Merit; numerous Silver Stars; Purple Hearts; Presidential Citations; Expert Combat Infantry Badges; Campaign Stars and multiple American and foreign service medals. The foreign service medals include recognition by the governments of Korea, Laos, Thailand, Vietnam and Australia. A member of Merrill’s Marauders in Burma during WW II (The Marauders were the forerunners of today’s Rangers, the Army’s renowned special forces group.) A member of the “Wolfhounds” in the Korean War, engaging in the greatest bayonet attack by U.S. soldiers since Cold Harbor in the Civil War; an advisor and coordinator of Green Beret detachments in the vicinity of the Ho Chi Minh Trail along the Vietnamese-Laotian border; served in the Pentagon with the Office of Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, with the mission of developing a manual concerning the assignment of enlisted personnel worldwide; a soldier on the front line of battle also serving unofficially as Chaplain to his men, and eventually a civilian Minister as well.

A partial listing of his Honors and Awards include: Nomination for the Congressional Medal of Honor; Senate proclamations by the States of Texas, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia and South Carolina; the 21st inductee, including the Revolutionary War, into the Ranger Hall of Fame located at Ft. Benning, GA; acknowledgment plaque at the Soldier’s and Sailor’s Memorial Museum at Pittsburgh, PA; Alumni of the Year, 1997, at the Transylvania Bible School in Pennsylvania; the first edition of his book “Fighting Preacher” received the George Washington Medal of Excellence from the Freedom Foundation at Valley Forge, PA; the Korean Commemorative War Medal.

Col Weston was a great American patriot that all Americans can be proud of.

Seoul, July 28.—(AP) — Airman Third Class Dennis Judd of 215 Burrows street, Pittsburgh, Pa., a gunner on a night-flying B-26 light bomber, dropped the last bomb of the Korean war, the Fifth air force said Tuesday. The plane crossed the battle line at 9:29 Monday night and dropped its eight 500-pound bombs on a cluster of personnel shelters in the Kumsong region of North Korea four minutes later — twenty-two minutes before the cease fire.

the 8th Bomb Squadron, 3rd Bomb Wing flying out of Kunsan, Korea (K-8). An 8th Bomb Squadron crew was selected to fly this last mission by Headquarters of 5th Air Force because the 8th Bomb Squadron dropped the first bombs of the war thirty-seven months earlier.
I have a personal interest in this mission because I was the gunner of this crew. We had gone to our afternoon briefing and received our targets of the evening. The significance of this mission did not go unnoticed by the press. While milling around and talking after the briefing I was approached by Col. E. B. LeBaillie, 3rd Bomb Wing Co. He “asked” me if I would step aside and let Dennis Judd fly in my position. Apparently some press personnel felt it would make good press back in the States to have a mixed race crew. Needless to say I was very disappointed to miss out on a history making event but at least I was able to take the enclosed picture. James Q. Lamson, 520 South Main Street, Plainwell, MI 49080

USS Hailey in the Korean War

The period from 11 October to 5 February was spent in the Korean War Zone except for brief upkeep periods in Sasebo and Yokosuka. At different times the Hailey was part of the famous Fast Carrier Task Force 77 and a link in the Blockade formed by Task Force 95. In support of ground troops and on destructive missions the ship’s batteries poured out over 3,300 rounds of 5 inch ammunition earning for the ship a reputation for accuracy and dependability.

Coming Home by Ship

The article in March-April issue reminded me of when I returned home from Korea in April, 1953. My friend and I were looking forward to being discharged on the west coast, traveling cross-country touring the country and picking up odd jobs along the way. We were very unhappy to find out that we were to be on the first ship to go to land in New York City with troops from Columbia, Puerto Rico and the east coast, passing thru the Panama Canal. Then docking at NYC on Good Friday. We had so many meals with rice that I still don’t like it. I wonder how many out there that I never met may have been on that ship. To my knowledge it was never done again.

Bill Mauldin was a hero in Korea also

Bill Mauldin keeps multiplying into a man of many parts. He remarks, “It makes me feel downright professional as a writer to have a genuine illustrator decorate my stuff.” Genuine illustrator Thornton Utz will agree that this young fellow, originally famed for his priceless drawings of our soldiers in World War II, is a pretty genuine picture-maker himself, and Mauldin’s text in his five books, plus his many magazine articles, make it high time he did feel like a professional at juggling words. Mauldin also feels well this week because this is his first published fiction.

Other multiplying of his parts includes collaborating on two movies and acting in one of them.
As Richard Gallmeyer lay in a hospital bed for three months recovering from major surgery, the faded, black and white photographs of his Korean War battle buddies were what kept him going and gave him his will to live. “Those are what kept me alive,” he said. “I told my wife that if I ever get out of here, I want to find my buddies.”

After returning home in the fall of 1994, Gallmeyer did just that and today has a database filled with more than 23,000 names and addresses of Korean War veterans from all branches of service. In the fall of 1994 he formed the nonprofit organization named Korean War Veterans Reunion, Inc., and has spent the last eight years researching and compiling his list of Korean War veterans so fellow service members have a way to find each other. In his initial year, his list grew to 3,000. It has been growing rapidly ever since.

As he shuffled through his office closet, he emerged with boxes filled with letters and notes with names and addresses scribbled on them. His blue eyes sparkled with the enthusiasm of a young child who found a long lost toy as he said the boxes included information for more than 6,000 Korean War veterans that he has not been able to place in his database because of the time.

Gallmeyer said he is an organization of one and cannot keep up with the information coming in. He said he hopes to find a sponsor in his home city of Virginia Beach, Va., to provide him a location to continue his life’s work and for volunteers to help him keep up with his ever-expanding list of veterans looking for each other. For now, Gallmeyer keeps plugging away at his list in his home, which doubles as a miniature museum of the Korean War. Walls dressed with Korean War photos, maps, flags and letters that scream volumes about the story of war. Photo albums sit on his coffee table containing more images, documents, assignments and menus from unit holiday dinners evoking memories of military men and women who fought for their country.

While striving to help Korean War veterans get in touch with each other, Gallmeyer said it was great to see the Department of Defense honor them during the 50th anniversary of the war and to help educate people so that they would not become service members who fought in a forgotten war. “After all these years, we’re finally being remembered. What else can I say?” Gallmeyer said the Defense Department’s commemoration and the Korean War Veterans Memorial erected on The Mall near the Lincoln Memorial in 1995 is helping Americans learn about the Korean War, which statistically, was the most violent war for the United States except for the Civil War. About 37,000 U.S. military personnel died in 37 months of combat in Korea.

Gallmeyer doesn’t look back at the darkness of war, he spends his life looking for those who were lucky enough to make it home, and each year he sponsors a reunion for all Korean War veterans to get together, to be a family again. For the past eight years, his reunions have brought together thousands of Korean War veterans and their families from across the country. This year, for the ninth annual reunion, he is having a Christmas dinner in Laughlin, Nev. He said this dinner will be the first sit down Christmas reunion that most of them could not enjoy 50 years ago. He laughs as a 3x5-inch black and white photograph takes him back to his time in Korea, where tired, ragged men sat on the ground drinking from their tin canteen cups with a tank looming ominously in the background. With the annual reunions and his ever-growing list of Korean War veterans, Gallmeyer said he cannot stop what he began eight years ago. “It’s something I have to do,” said the 75-year-old Gallmeyer. “I just can’t stop anymore. If I didn’t have anything, I could look forward to death, and that’s no fun. What I have to look forward to is finding Korean War veterans.”

The Korean War Veterans Reunion, Inc. 9th Annual reunion will be Dec. 8-11 at the Ramada Express in Laughlin, Nev. For more information about the reunion or the organization, contact Richard Gallmeyer at 1-800-523-4715 or via e-mail at msg1gal@aol.com. Information about the reunion can also be found online at www.koreanwarveteransonline.org.
They said the Korean War ended July 27, 1953. However, for Sam Fire and hundreds of others like him their missions in the Pacific peninsula were just beginning. While the ink was drying on the signatures of the armistice, it became clear to them that their lives were still very much in danger. “I expected that it was going to be a cake walk,” Fire said. “I didn’t expect what we went into. No one did. We found out the hard way.”

After landing at Inchon and making his way south to Pusan in August 1953, Fire, then a tough, 21-year-old Army private, soon found himself working on the riot squad at a prison camp and assisting military police with prisoner exchanges. “It was a combat situation,” he said. “The tension was still there for four or five months (after the armistice). The war didn’t end July 27. There was a constant tension in the prison camp and assisting military police with prisoner exchanges. “It was a combat situation,” he said. “The tension was still there for four or five months (after the armistice). The war didn’t end July 27. There was a constant tension in the prison camp and assisting military police with prisoner exchanges.”

Fire said he spent his time there trying to ensure some sense of order in the camp by searching prisoners for weapons and checking for escapees at all hours of the day and night and trying to stop the prisoners loyal to the communist leadership from killing those who said they did not want to return north. That job never became routine, he said. The constant tension in the prison camps kept everyone uneasy. While on this duty, Fire said he was never more conscious about the thought of death. “We went into that compound every night while on the riot squad,” he said. “We could have been killed. As a young kid, I was scared to death the whole time.”

Chinese POWs march of out a Pusan-area prison camp in Sept. 1953.

This job required him to go into the areas where the prisoners lived, including sleeping quarters and do head-counts and check for weapons. He said you did the job as fast as you could because although you had a gun, you were still outnumbered by the enemy. After Christmas of that year, Fire received marching orders and headed up to the Demilitarized Zone where he worked on a surveying crew. His crew took on the task of heading up past the front lines to try and determine the exact locations of enemy strongholds so they could be accurately targeted. Fire said there were countless times that fear was almost overwhelming from the constant sniper fire and ever-present danger of land mines. However, he said those who served in the Korean War did whatever job needed to be done.

“I was glad to serve my country,” Fire said. “I went with no animosity. As he, looks back at what they did a half a century ago, he said it is important that people today never forget what the veterans did. He said it meant a lot to him when he learned about the Department of Defense’s 50th Anniversary of the Korean Commemoration Committee and the events they sponsored to help educate the nation about the significance of the Korean War while thanking all Korean War veterans for their sacrifices and service. “I think (the commemoration) means a lot to all of us that were there,” Fire said. “I’m very pleased that the commemoration occurred.”

He said today’s youth need to learn about war and the impact it has on the freedom people in this country has and what its military has done to ensure the freedoms of other peace-loving people. “Any war that carries the flag of the United States perpetuates the freedom we have,” Fire said. “Where we are living today is because of the sacrifices of those that served before.” Although Fire will not attend the National Salute to Korean War Veterans, July 25-27 in Washington D.C., which will focus on the commemoration of the signing of the armistice, the Philadelphia resident said that it will be a great way to honor those who did not make it back. “I made it back and I’m very fortunate. About 38,000 (Americans) never did. I feel so sad for the guys who didn’t come back. In the future, I hope we can work things out without going through this again.”

Some time back, says he, he felt artistic and worked seventeen months on a play, then decided it wasn’t so good and wouldn’t let anybody read it. Somebody better grab off this playwright before somebody else sews him up.

In the country above New York live free-lancer and Mrs. Mauldin, their three sons and a jeep. Life there is different from in Korea, where Mauldin went last year. Yet the Korean mountain warfare was so much like the campaigns in Italy that “it was surprisingly easy to adjust to being in a war again.” (Bill Mauldin passed away last January. Korean War Truce Bugler

As we approach the 50th Anniversary of Little Switch which took place on April 26th 1953 I wanted to share a true story about an event that took place. I was serving with the 1st Marine Div. 1st Service BN. near Panmunjom, Korea during Little Switch and was sent over to Freedom Village to help with the returning POWs. As the ambulances pulled up we would help or carry the returning POWs into the medical tents that were set up to examine and tag the sick and wounded prior to transporting them further to the rear.

As I was doing this one ambulance pulled up and as we opened the door a skeleton like man fell out onto the ground. I picked him up and helped him into the medical tent. As it has turned out that man I picked up was a Bill Smith. He had been a POW since Nov. 2nd 1950, some 29 months. He moved to my home town about three years ago and joined our Korean War Vet. Association here in Quincy, IL. We got to talking about our experiences and discovered that he was one of the returnees at little switch and that he had fallen out of the ambulance and a Marine had picked him up and took him into the medical tent. That of course was me. What a small world. When Bill Smith was captured he weighed 192 pounds and when he got to freedom village he was down to 85 pounds. We have become good friends and he keeps thanking me for picking him up that day at Freedom Village 50 years ago. Little did we know that some 90 days later the Korean War would end and that I would be the Bugler to signal the Cease Fire at the UN Truce Camp at 2200 hours on July 27th.

The William Allen Scholarship

May 1, 2003 Former Prisoner Of War Korea, William Allen and his wife Helen Attended the Awards Ceremony at the local high school in Saint Petersburg, Florida, to present Alicia Poole a check for the amount of $1,000 for the winning essay in the scholarship given from the sale of Bill’s book “My Old Box Of Memories. This scholarship is in conjunction with The 50th Anniversary Of the Korean War. The scholarship was started in 2000 and would have finished in July of 2003. Because of the interest in the book he has decided to extend the award for two more years. Writing the book served two purposes. The first is it tells the story on a personal account of early stages of the war. The second reason was it enabled Bill to raise the funds to award students with the scholarships. He is now compiling information for the history of Charlie Company, 19th Inf. Regt. From the day it arrived in Korea until it returned to Japan. Former members that are interested can contact Bill Allen at 421 Ave., Tierra Verde, FL 33715 or <wallen2@tampabay.rr.com>.

My Brother Was A Hero Also
My brother Corp. Edward J. Connelly was killed in Korea Dept, 3, 1951. That is why I am a member of KWV A. At the time Eddie enlisted we felt that the Army was wrong for taking him because he was stone deaf in the right ear. A while after he was killed we received a letter from PFC. William Winnenger, RA56073462 telling us how Eddie was killed and we knew he was a hero. We had a childhood friend in a group that was ordered to take a hill (Heartbreak Ridge) and they became pinned down by a machine gun nest. Eddie was the radioman, he took off the radio, grabbed a recoilless rifle and whipped out the nest. He was only one killed in that action. For that he received the Bronze Star. I watch CNN all the time and between Afghanistan and Iraq they have passed out the Bronze Star like peanuts and popcorn. The people who decide what deed deserves what metal have degraded the Bronze Star. We all know the Purple Heart is awarded to anyone wounded or killed in action. Bronze is for a deed over and beyond their duty. In my brother’s case under President Bush he would have received the Congressional Medal of Honor. I have a great love for our boys in the military and would never begrudge them from being honored, but it really hurts to know how little by big brother (age 19) was honored.

I Went Under That Bridge Also
The Graybeards cover from March-April reminded me of the time I returned to the States from Korea. We could see the lights of the city, San Francisco as they came into shape. We passed under the ridge near 2 o’clock in the morning. It was very quiet as the ship passed under the ridge. When from the fan tail end of the ship came loud and clear a voice that cried out as the ship cleared the inside or bay side of the bridge these words “You will never get me west of this son of a bitch again.” I had left Korea on the 6th of Oct. 1951. I entered Korea from Japan on July 18, 1950. I served with the 14th Combat Engineers and the 5th RCT. 24th Inf. Div. this trip under the Golden Gate Bridge was my 45th in WWII and Korean War.

Golden State Bridge View Going Out
In the last issue of the “Graybeards” on the cover was a picture of the Golden Gate Bridge and a narrative by Wayne Doenges of his departure from the states and return. My story is my departure from the states and last view of the Golden Gate Bridge. I enlisted in the USAF Jan. 1951. Took basic at Lackland AF, Camera Repair School at Lowry AFB in Denver, CO, and then O.J.T. training at Hill AFB, Utah till Feb. 1953. I departed San Francisco the last of Feb. 1953 aboard the USMC Walker and hit rough weather outside the Bay - much seasickness with 5,000 airmen, soldiers and marines aboard. After 13 days aboard that miserable ship we arrived in Japan and I was sent to Tsuiki AFB on the southern island of Kyushu as a gun camera repairman on F-86 Sabrejets. I returned to the states in Feb. 10564 and finished the last year of my enlistment at DOW AF in Bangor, Maine.

Wife Fits My Uniform
A few years back in “The Graybeards” there was two Korean War Veterans bragging how they still can wear their uniforms. Well, I can’t but my wife can and here is the proof. Ladies don’t get offended.

Sussex County Chapter #1 of Delaware

Korean War Memorial Ceremony

Following the wreath ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery, the Korean War Veterans continued their odyssey to remember and pay homage to the fallen comrades killed in the mountains and rice paddies of Korea.

As our shoulders nearly brushed the granite wall on our right, we passed the thousands of faces on the wall. The faces were created by etching actual pictures of the soldiers, airmen, navy, and coast guard who served in Korea.

As the group reach the front of the Korean War Memorial and formed a line around the flagpole flying the beautiful red, white, and blue flag, the ceremony immediately attracted a crowd of about 100 tourist and visitors.

KWVA President Russ Cunningham spoke to both the veterans and the onlookers. He stressed that the purpose of American partic-

Next were our two buglers, Ray Rogers and Dave Allwood, then came the Korean War Veterans, followed by spouses and friends carrying fresh flowers.

A short, sharp bugle call brought the group into slow march to the front of the beautiful memorial. On our left we passed nineteen 8’ statues of a foot patrol in combat. Dressed in bronzed military uniforms, ponchos draped over shoulders, radios and rifles in hand, the silent group appeared in motion. To many of us, the eyes followed our progress.

As the group reach the front of the Korean War Memorial and formed a line around the flagpole flying the beautiful red, white, and blue flag, the ceremony immediately attracted a crowd of about 100 tourist and visitors.

KWVA President Russ Cunningham spoke to both the veterans and the onlookers. He stressed that the purpose of American partic-
Korean War Vets and families remember the 33,500 killed, 105,000 wounded, and the 8,100 who never returned.

Korean War participation in the Korean War was to restore the freedom of the Korean people. And that we had succeeded. Today, fifty years later, the people of South Korea are still free. A tribute to the success of our sacrifices.

But, noting the 35,000 men killed in freeing the South Korean people, there was a heavy price to pay—which underscores our slogan “Freedom Is Not Free”.

KWVA’s Mike Mihalo gave a brief, but stirring prayer. The wreath bearers Ruley Banks and Ray Musciano then presented the wreath to KWVA Roger Reeves. He took the wreath and laid it at the head of the statues. The spouses and friends then came forward individually to lay a fresh flower beside the wreath.

The ceremony concluded with a beautiful rendition of the “Taps”. Bugler Ray Rogers, stationed at the flagpole played each chord with a pause. Bugler Dave Atwood, located to the rear of the memorial, repeated each chord. The echo effect was haunting. By the time the final note receded, dozens of faces were wet with tears.

We had done our Duty! We did Remember! We shall always Remember! !

Army Survivor of the Chosin Few Honored

Delaware KWVA vets paid their last respects to one of their own. In a memorial service at their May meeting, the Delaware Veterans said goodbye to Jean Paul Bizier. Bizier served with the 32nd Regt., of the 7th Inf. Div. in 1950-1951 during the Army’s epic battle with the Chinese on the east side of the Chosen Reservoir.

Bizier’s wife Betty, children, and grandchildren attended the memorial service. The family was presented a beautiful Bible in recognition of his service to his country. In brief remarks, chapter president Russ Cunningham noted that the bible was a memento presented on behalf of a grateful nation and the respect of his fellow veterans.

Cunningham noted that the fate of the 7th’s men had been overshadowed by the news coverage of the Marine’s fight on the west side of the Chosen. “It was a forgotten battle of a forgotten war. Many of the men were heroes, fighting through a few freezing and terrifying days to the last of their ability. Few were ever honored. His comrades of the KWVA are doing that today.”

The Chapter Honor Guard, Chaplin, and Sgt. Of Arms participated in the memorial service. Member Roger Reeves presented each family member with a Korean War Commemoration Pin. Vice President Walt Koopman presented the family a framed picture of Bizier surrounded by some of the Chapter members. (See Photos.) (Thank you Russ Cunningham for photos and letters.)

Manasota Chapter #199 of Florida

World War II air combat operations were vividly described by two of the famed Tuskegee airmen at a recent membership meeting of our Chapter. The overflow crowd of 103 WWII and Korean War Veterans were treated to a fast paced presentation which included the roles of the P-51 Mustang fighter and the Billy Mitchell B-25 bomber.

Northwest Alabama Chapter 2

Chapter members had the pleasure of serving two purposes on May 9, 2003. All Korean War Veterans were specifically honored during Senior Citizen Appreciation Day for persons 60 years old and over, sponsored by NACOLG’s, (Northwest Alabama Council Of Local Government), Department of Aging Services from 9 am until 3 pm at the Florence, AL Coliseum. There were over 1100 local citizens attending this event, which included singers, music, dancing, and drawings for gifts. We had several veterans enjoy this 6 hour event, which included a lunch. We accepted many complimentary remarks for all Korean War Veterans and passed out information brochures and discussed the war with those having interest. We emphasized that we wanted to honor the Korean War Casualties and their families. In addition, the KWVA Chapter 2 members set up a display of Korean War information, to recruit new members.

We are in the process of raising money for our KWVA Memorial Monument to be erected in Austintown, Ohio. This quilt was made by two of our members Harry and Jane Ponikvar, it measures 6 foot by 8 foot. It took Harry and Jane 7 months to finish it. Shown holding the quilt is from left Larue Brown and Joann Onstott, Associate Captain. We have various money making projects to help fund this memorial.

(Thank you Joann Onstott for photo and letter)

Veteran Richard Koker was honored as VETERAN OF THE YEAR for 2003 by the United Veterans Council of Mahoning County. Koker, is a signer, which means he interprets speech into sign language for those with hearing problems. Rich has signed for the Vice President, the Governor, Senators and Congressman, and for numerous religious affairs and veterans programs. His smiling face is well known over the northern regions of Ohio. In 2001 Koker returned to Korea after 50 years and even did a little signing “over there.” Congratulations, Richard Koker of Youngstown, Ohio

Our Chapter has an outstanding Ritual Team of which we are very proud. We perform Military Rites for any veteran. We usually have 5 or 6 funerals a year. We have already performed for four funerals so far this year. We recently had three funerals in three weeks. We often serve as pall bearers as well. At times we have provided total graveside rites at the National Cemetery in Danville. Our Chaplain, Harold Bott is a very talented minister who wears many hats.

Several times funeral directors have called us the day before a funeral. They know we will be there. Our last service was for an Army Retiree from the Vietnam era. Sometimes it’s hard for us to realize that these kids, we used to know, are becoming old men, like us. We also Post the Colors for various groups from time to time and participate in many parades. Korea Fifty Years Ago

Bugler, prepare yourself To play taps upon this day. For a very special group of men, That the Lord has called away. We have gathered here from every state, Cities, throughout the land. To pay respect to those Beneath the rough Korean sands. We were there in Korea Beneath the smoke filled sky above. There we grieved for our Dear Brothers, So many did we lose. I watched the flag as it unfurled, And waved freely in the sky. Then I asked myself again, “Lord, why? Please tell me why?” To our right we saw so many. Off to our left was no surprise. For the dead were in the hundreds We could hardly believe our eyes. For the battle now is over, For some they do not care. Fifty years have just gone by, But we still see them lying there. To us they are the heroes, And for America they stood true. The men that rest in Korea Beneath the red, the white, and the blue.

By Walter M. Bennett

We ask for so little and we ask for no more but, please remember Korea, the Forgotten War. Some men are members of the Chosin Few, a place in Korea that we never knew. We got there the 27th of November, at the Chosen Reservoir, I’ll always remember. So many died but they all died in vain, some died quickly, but many died in pain. Thirty-four trucks loaded with wounded and dying, Oh Lord, what a shame, I watched gas poured on them and then, I saw them go up in flame. When I go to Heaven, as all God’s children do, I’m sure I’ll meet the men of the Chosin Few.

At My Mother’s Side

I was at my mother’s side The day the notice came, It said your son is missing We share your grief and pain. I was at my mother’s side When she cried and carried on, I really didn’t understand, But I knew that something must be wrong. I was at my mother’s side As she anxiously did search, For word that would reveal to her Where her son could be. With the passing of my parents, They may think the matter closed. Just another M.I.A. To mark our struggles fought. An M.I.A. He is not! He’s more than that to me. For what he meant to her, He also means to me. What They never realized is I was at my mother’s side The answers that They kept from her, They now must give to me.

By David A. Velasco

The “Forgotten War” No More

Some have made the grave mistake Of calling Korea the forgotten war But you can bet that none of them Had to storm the Inchon shore I am also very positive its memory Unfortunately stays with all of those That at the Chosin Reservoir They shivered, fought and froze Perhaps you know of someone Who fought among the ranks And saw the awful, bloody terror Of “Old Baldy” or the Yalu River banks Be assured that a foggy memory Would be a relief to maintain For those that charged up the hill: “Heartbreak Ridge” it seems, in vain We can he sure that there are some To this very day can still Hear the horrors of the battle We know as “Pork Chop Hill” Definitely an everlasting imprint Of the 38th parallel has been burned Into the hearts and minds of families Of the many heroes that never returned We are coming up on fifty years Since Panmunjom brought peace In Honor of those that fought there May the memory never cease

Korea The Forgotten War

This is the end of my story, but I’ll ask it once more, please remember Korea, the Forgotten War. The hills around us bombed with napalm were bare, and “yes” Hell did freeze over once, I know because I was there. My name is Fred and my brother is James, we survived going through that misery and pain. After 44 years, I read and hear by mouth that in Korea, there’s still a North and a South. This is truly the end of my story and I’ll say no more, but when James and I left Korea, we had won our war.

Monuments and Memories

Korea, The Forgotten War............. remembered

California Remembers

Ventura County KWVA Chapter #56 paid for 12 signs as shown in photo. They are placed over 44 miles of Highway 126 between Highway 101 (Ventura County) and Highway 5 (Los Angeles County).

Pennsylvania Remembers

The Korean War Monument in Shippensburg, PA There are two (2) of these monuments at the entrance to Shippensburg Memorial Park. The one on the left side list the WWII Veterans and the one on the right side list the Korean War Veterans.

Illinois Remembers

Korean War Memorial in Kennedy Park, Chicago, IL.

Colorado Remembers

On Memorial Day, celebrated 26 May 03, I visited the Colorado State Veterans Center, Homelake, Colorado. On the drive to Homelake I passed the newly erected highway signs that announce the Colorado Korean War Veterans Memorial Highway and the 38th Parallel. The Highway is approximately 116 miles in length and is located in Southwestern CO. It is about 116 miles long, rectangular in shape and the 38th Paralell crosses it twice. Quite unusual but appropriate for the Memorial Highway. (Walter Walko in photo and took both photos.)

The legislators who introduced it in the Colorado Legislature are State Senator Lewis H. Entz (a Korean War Veteran) and State Representative John Salazar. They also got the approval for the Korean War Veterans vehicle license plates which are now being issued. We Colorado Korean War Vets certainly owe those gentlemen for their efforts and diligence.

Ohio Remembers

Last June the President and Vice President of the Greene County Chapter # 125 made a presentation to the Superintendent and school board members of the Xenia Community Schools. The topic of the presentation was that there was nothing honoring the veterans who had attended the Xenia Schools through out all wars. There was a large number of former students who were wounded and quite a few gave their lives in past wars. The Superintendent thought it was a great idea and he accepted the challenge. He got the school board members to go along with the project and formed a committee to raise the funds needed for the
The Xenia Alumni Veterans Memorial in Veterans Field is located on the north side of Business US 35 in Xenia, Ohio at the football field west toward Dayton, Ohio. The memorial is the same on both sides so that it can be viewed from the highway and the football field. It is lighted for night viewing.

The Xenia Alumni Veterans Memorial project. All funds came from private individuals and local businesses in the community. The memorial was dedicated on Memorial Day 2003. In less than one year the funds were collected and the memorial was constructed. This shows what can be accomplished when you get the right people behind a worthwhile project. The Greene County Chapter is proud to have been the catalyst for this project and we now have a beautiful memorial to honor all of the Alumni Veterans of the Xenia Schools who served in all wars.

Delaware Remembers

Delaware KWVA bugler George Taylor is pictured beside the Delaware Korean War Memorial following the dedication on Memorial Day.

A detachment of Delaware KWVA Honor Guards stands in front of the Delaware Korean War Memorial.

Kansas Remembers

The Kansas Korean War Memorial in Veterans Memorial Park, Wichita honors the men and women from the state who served in Korea for their struggles and sacrifices under trying circumstances in service to their country and the cause of freedom and is dedicated to those that made the supreme sacrifice.

MG Frank Vavala, Adj. Gen. of the Del. National Guard and Frank Howerton, Vice Cmdr. of Chapter #2 KWVA.

On the morning of June 25th, 2002 five members of the 6147th Tac Con Gp, Mosquito Association, arrived on to the campus of Old Queens Rutgers University. Their visit by invitation, was submitted by the Commander(Col Randall S. Lanning, USAF) his Cadre and Cadets of the Air Force ROTC, Det 485. The cordial invite was for a Korean War Monument Dedication in memory of Captain Wilbur S. Darby, USAF, who was killed in action during air strike operations as pilot of his T6 aircraft in Korea, October 24, 1952. Captain Darby an alumni of Rutgers in the year 1940, received great honorable mention this day to his heroism not only as a pilot with the 6147th Tac Con Gp, but the Silver Star and Bronze Star Medal awarded for his duties as a Forward Air Controller with the 6150th Tac Con Sq prior to his last flight.

The bronze plaque dedicated at the campus was unveiled by Capt Darby’s wife and Col. Lanning. Special reading was made by one of Capt. Darby’s daughters; Mrs Joan “JED” Chang representing the Darby Family. It was noted that JED wore proudly around her neck the Silver Star and Bronze Star awarded her father. Present to speak on behalf of the Mosquitos was our President, Dan McConaghy who did an excellent job in a speech about our Association and commanding a special salute toward the plaque from the remaining Mosquitos; Johnny Abbotts, Fred Holmes, Sam Gattenella and Dick Souza.

We were treated with respect from Col Lanning’s Staff and his Cadets. We left that day with thought that the future of our US Air Force will be in good hands in the future.

It was a great day for all and I believe mostly for us as we looked at a monument that had Mosquito History. The ROTC planners decided to include onto the plaque the Mosquito emblem which we were proud to see.

We said our fairwell to home from the University that day, content and proud to have been there. On the way home we passed the resting place of this man we honored. In our hearts we gave him a final salute with knowing here in place rested a man who we knew that day, felt an honor to himself, and the knowing not far, his name lives on for centuries to come. MAY HE REST IN PEACE.
Another Hero Remembered
By R. D. Santora

LT.COL. Bert SANTORA (Ret.) -WWII veteran and POW in Korea (Nov. 1950 - Aug. 1953)

My aunt, Dr. Olga Santora, notified me of her brother’s passing. Bert died Nov. 2, 2002 shortly after his 90th birthday (10/23/02).

Bert was drafted mid 1942-hoping for the USAAF. He was a school teacher and at 29 too old to be considered for pilot training. Instead the army thought he was good infantry material. He completed OCS, commissioned a 2nd LT., and following advanced infantry training landed in southern France - Aug. 1944.

He promptly rose to a Major in Patton’s 80th Infantry Div. when wounded Nov. 27, 1944 near the German border. His rapid promotion was indicative of the battle intensity. He seldom talked about WWII but praised the close ground support of USAAF P-51s, P-47s and P-38s.

Bert returned to the states after VE day and stayed in the Army. His rank dropped back to Caption but was shortly returned to Major and then to Lt. Colonel just before Korea.

In Korea Lt. Col. Santora was assigned as an advisor to the 7th ROK Division in Oct. 1950. His last letter home was from the Yalu River area just after China entered the “WAR”. His 3rd Regiment was driven back by the Red attack and was saved from being cut off by the US 2nd Division and a UN artillery barrage.

He was reported missing as of Nov. 27, 1950, six years to the day after being wounded in Europe.

A month later the Chinese photo service sent several photos of unidentified captured Americans to US newspapers. Bert’s wife and relatives thought they recognized him in one of the photos but we heard no word from him for over a year. He resisted communist indoctrination and refused to write home their propaganda. The communist eased up after the first year and he could write in his own words, with censorship restriction.

He survived 33 months of captivity and was released Aug. 1953 The first winter was brutal-many just gave up. He acknowledged that he was one of the ten officers in the Chinese photo. Relatives picked him out as the officer on the left in the light jacket, with a gloved hand. Bert said that he is the one standing right in front of the one we identified.

He turned down WAR College and remained a Lt. Colonel retiring in the mid 60s to his hometown area of Oneonta N.Y. He and his wife had three children, the first a daughter, a year after being released in Korea. He was a much requested speaker at civic organization and patriotic events.

It is planned to have a military service Memorial Day in Meridale, N.Y. I have no information on any of the other officers in the photo—who they are or if they survived. I don’t know if the photo has been seen/published since 1950/51-maybe some of your readers can supply additional information.

Looking for...

The 96th FA Bn. is looking for members who served in Korea from Sept. 1950 to July 1958. We have 444 members located and on our roster. Our Assn. is active with reunions and comradeship. Please contact Arnold Anderson, HC 83 Box 116A, Custer, SD 57730. Phone 605/673-6313.

I am trying to have my Army DD-214 Discharge corrected. My name is Cpl. Robert W. Sanford and I served in Korea with HQ. CO. & HQ., 194th Combat Engineer Bn. in the Heavy Equip. Section as a 6 ton truck/trailer operator from Oct. 1951-Aug. 1952. We moved around Korea several times but when I rotated the unit was at Kumwha, North Korea. All of my Buddies knew me as Sandy (our Korean House Boy, Kim, called me Shindy). I was discharged from Camp Rucker, Alabama in Jan. 1953 after spending only 53 days there following reassignment. Some of the statements on my DD-214 were not correct when it was typed and after reviewing it with authorities after checking my records at that time, I was promised that a new one would be made out and mailed to my then home address. It NEVER CAME. I thought about pursuing it several times but at age 21 at that time, it was never one of my priorities, so pursuit was always put off until later. Well, later finally arrived and I started trying to get it squared away early in 2002.

I filled out the proper forms with the help of veteran representatives. The Dept. of The Army came back and told me that my military records were destroyed in a fire in 1973 in The Personnel Records Keeping Bldg. in St. Louis, Missouri and that changes could not be made unless I could prove to them with documentation that I actually served in Korea. So now I need help from anyone out there who remembers me. The reason that I want to get my DD-214 corrected now is I have given this a lot of thought lately. I have a copy of my Fathers and his Fathers discharges which I treasure and now that I am almost 73 years old, I know my children (now grown) and my grandchildren would feel the same way about my discharge also, but, I want it to be right—the way it should have been from the beginning. I would like to have it as part of my legacy that I leave behind. Can you help me?? My home address is 432 Walnut Hill Road, Woonsocket, RI 02895, Tel: (401) 766-8262 E-mail: <boblor-san@aol.com>.

We are looking for a Salvatore Russo who served with C Btry, 92nd Armored Field Artillery Battalion (Red Devils). He came from the Douglas Street area down near the Brooklyn Water Front. Contact Pete Taormina, 1011 SW 16 St., Boynton Beach, FL 33426. Tel: 516-732-8881- E-mail <taorminap@yahoo.com>.

For some time now I have been trying to find out anything about the Korean War DMZ Line. Somewhere, sometime, somehow, surveyors staked out and monumented the boundaries of the DMZ. As an artillery surveyor in Korea in 1950-51 with the 8221st AU, Field Artillery, Topographic & Meteorological Detachment, I am looking for anyone or anybody that can shed some light on this mission. Somebody or unit had to have had the mission and had to have documented the survey. Contact CW3 Michael C.J. Kaminski, USAR Ret. E-mail <mcjk.8152@worldnet.att.net>.

Trying to locate Sgt. Walter Six who was a Marine photographed in Korea. He and Sgt. Scinto filmed much of the Chosin Reservoir battles. I would like to communicate with Sgt. Six, if possible, before the Annual Reunion of B-1-5 which will take place in Sept. to discuss the film they made. I hope to have the video of it to show at the reunion and would like to discuss it with him beforehand. Contact Milton H. Donaldson at <mckeyed1932@earthlink.net>.

Am trying to locate members of Hq. Co., 6th QM Group who served in Pusan and in Inchon during the period of Sept. 1951 through Jan. 1953. Contact Keith Lovekamp, 216 Wayne Ave., Stuarts Draft, VA 24477. Tel: 540-337-3736 or E-mail at <lovekamp@cfw.com>.

Nearly forty members of the 8221st Army Unit, formed to provide weather and survey data to the X Corps Field Artillery (Korea 1950-1954), will attend the 50th Year Anniversary of the Korean War Cease Fire in Washington D.C. on July 27. They will gather first at Gettysburg PA, from their homes in all parts of America, and then go by bus to the D.C. ceremony. The 8221st F.A. Topo. & Met. Detachment had its initial combat experience with the invasion of N. Korea at Hungnam. Support of the field artillery and air operations by this unit of 50 specialists continued until the cease-fire was declared. Approximately 150 soldiers rotated in and out of the Unit’s complement during the history of the 8221st. Come and join us. Contact James Nibbe at e-mail <jnibbe5@yahoo.com> or Michael Kaminski at <mcjk.8152@worldnet.att.net>.

Brilliant, embroidery, 11” Red White & Blue logo, suitable for back of jacket, is available at a cost of $15.50. Allow 2 weeks for delivery. Contact Jerry Guinn, Chapter # 168 KWVA, PO Box # 6713, Rock Island, IL 61204-6713. Or E-mail at <fourduce@qconline.com>.

Christmas in July is not an original title, but it is appropriate for the story of Christmas Hill in July 1953 fighting until the very end. It was written by over 20 veterans of the 2nd Bn, 180t Inf., 1st Bn., 179th Inf., B Bat., 145th AAA AW (SP), 45th Inf. Div. It also includes a little about the 5th RCT and PEFTOK. It is on the web at <www.northcoast.com/~dogface> or at the webpage of Humboldt State University (don’t forget the d). Click on “Departments.” Click on “History.” Scroll down to “Dogface” The story is intended for historians of the future as well as veterans and their families. It is free and fully downloadable. Contact Donald W. Nicol at E-mail <muddog@northcoast.com>.
Looking for veterans to attend The Oregon Trail Chapter KWVA Event. I would like to inform the veterans that we are planning a major commemoration ceremony of the end of the Korean War. The ceremony will take place on July 26, 2003, at the Oregon Korean War Memorial in Wilsonville, Oregon, between 10 am and noon. Wilsonville is a southwest Portland suburb, and is located on Interstate 5. Highway signs can direct drivers to the memorial. We have planned to have a military band, notable guest speakers, static displays of military hardware, and plenty of patriotism! The public is invited to attend. Contact Loren Mitchell e-mail <Lahom03@aol.com> or Tel: (503) 670-1382

I am giving away Korean bumper stickers to veterans. My mother (Joan) and dad (Harry) died recently and in their honor I had printed bumper stickers that say “Proud Son of a Korean War Veteran” and Proud Daughter of a Korean War Veteran.” The stickers are 3” x 11 1/2”. This is the second batch of stickers I had made. The first time I ordered 250 of each. I kept about 30 of each and sent the rest to the IMJIN Chapter in southern Illinois. I took it upon myself to contact people who identified themselves as children of a Korean War Veteran. I have sent out several stickers to those who responded. Some of them folded a basic business envelope self addressed and stamped and I put the sticker in there. I have not heard of anyone complaining of a creased sticker. Usually they put two stamps on the envelope and that was more than enough. Again though, I only have 500 of each. I don’t care who gets them or how they are distributed, I wish I could pay for over 18,000 but I just can’t do that. Hopefully someone will take up where I leave off and continue this. Contact Jim Reime at E-mail <save_our_guns@hotmail.com>

I received an email from a Rick Suarez I-3-7 KO CF 50/51. He thought you might be able to help me get info on my uncle James A. Stevens. He was KIA on 2-12-1951. He was in the 38th Inf. Div, Reg. 2, I Co., Army . I am trying to find someone who knew him. A man named David Sowell brought James belongings to my grandmas house but I do not know if he is still alive. Rick tells me when his Marine Div. came upon the area where James was killed they only found 2 survivors. Contact Susi at E-mail address <bilger@webound.com>

(Susi and I exchanged several E-mails. Susi and I now think he was KIA in Wonju. Being in the 2nd I.D and knowing many of my friends died in the February battles pushing the Chinese and North Koreans back across the 38th Parallel. I had just left the 2nd I.D. the last of January 1951 due to my brother being MIA. I hope in a later issue to print what was sent to Susi hoping to help closure on her KIA Uncle. Veterans we can all help others including Susi listed in our Looking For section. I have many books on the 2nd I.D. and Morning Reports [3,000 pages for 3 years.])–Ed

I served in Korea August 1952 to April 1953, I was part of the Forward Observer Team, 25th Inf. Div., Btry. B, 8th Field Artillery. Would like any contact from members of same, also you “Wolhounds”, 27th Infantry Regiment men, I served with, and information on that special 90 to 105 mm. piece that you men fired directly on the MLR at our enemy. Contact Alex Boboc, #41B, 1655 Post Road East, Westport CT. 06880. Tel: 203-319-0643.

I have been trying to locate an old Marine Corps buddy by the name of William J. Haberman Jr. who’s last known address was York, Nebraska. Contact Gordon W. Provost, 500 Ocean Street, Unit 18, Hyannis, MA 02601.

I am trying to find anyone who might have served with me, especially in Korea with 7th Inf. Div., 32nd Regt., 2nd Bn, Co. H. I went into Army April 4, 1951, after taking my basic training at Fort Ord, CA. We were sent to Japan. Stayed in an old Japanese Barracks, till sent into Korea. I was then sent to Korea. Probably in July or August, 1951. There I soon lost track of where we were, as I was trying to stay alive. If I remember right we went to the Chinese and Russian border. Sgt. Told about 5 of us to go look around. I don’t remember how I got back.

The 2nd division was sent out to front line. Their commander kept sending them out till only around 20 some where left. We had to relive them. We were told our records would be lost if we said anything, and they were.

We had the Ethiopians assigned to our company. They went out at night, and would kill enemy and bring back their heads. They would let out the most horrible noise as they killed the enemy.

We were known as tin can because we hung tin cans all around side of hill. This let us know when anyone approached. We also strung hand grenades around bunker, so one pull on the trip wire would set it all off.

One black soldier always moved very slow. We kept telling him move faster after a shell landed right near him, he moved very fast from then on.

One soldier kept telling us what he was going to do when he got off those hills. We told only two ways to get off early. Die or be totally crazy. He took a bunch of hand grenades and started throwing then everywhere.

Enemy fire broke lose. Don’t know what happened to him. I was checking telephone wire up on a hill. A shell landed beside me and I fell off the hill. It was about 2 stories high. Went to medic he took a piece of steel out of knee, put some white powder on it and bandage. I was sent back out on patrol.

Upon returning to the states I was assigned to 9th AAA Gun Bn. at Fort Winfield, Scott, CA. I was discharge from active duty, Jan. 1953, but held in ready reserves till Jan. 1959.

I am enclosing some pictures I took while over there hope someone recognize where we are and who the soldiers are. Would like very much to hear from anyone who was in Co. H. Contact Milton Friesenhahn, 3636 S. Ranch Drive, Ponca City, OK 74601. Tel: 580-765-8826.

(Sorry Milton, Photos are not good quality. I suggest you take them to a photo store and have all three printed on one glossy sheet photo paper. It costs under $1. Return the copy back to me along with your printed request for each photo. Also lower case type is best for me. Also if you went to the Chinese and Russian border in July or August in 1951 you would have ended up as a KIA or POW. The last time any part of the 8th army was that far north was late Nov.-Dec. of 1950. The 7th I.D. suffered heavy losses at the Chosin in Nov.-Dec. 1950. Falling off that hill sure hurt your memory. Maybe you have your year of going to Korea wrong. Thanks. Editor.)

I am trying to find Edward Foute or James W. Sweitz. I remember them from the 45th Inf. Div., 180th Regt., HQ Co., 1st Bn. Contact Al Ratner, 7233 Lugano Drive, Boynton Beach, FL 33457. Tel: 561-742-3901.

I am looking for anyone with L Co. 3rd Bn. 38th Reg. 2nd Div. Contact Donald Kindt, 6198 Wilson Road, Butler, Ohio 44822. Tel: 419-883-3925.

Looking for Jim Beyersdorf, Sam Fingerhut, Bill Harver, Bob Rapp and Bill Rotherberg and others. They served with me in the US Army from 4/5/51 to 4/5/53. After four months of basic training in Kentucky at Camp Breckinridge I was sent to C.I.C. School and then to German language School in Baltimore, Md. I was finally sent to a C.I.C. unit in Heidelberg, Germany in 1951 and was with this unit until I was discharged in 1953. Contact John J. Garra, 200 Clinton Street, Apt. 31, Brooklyn, NY 11201-5631.

All of us in the Korean War Veterans Association extend our sincere sympathy to the family and friends of those listed below. May they rest in peace. (Deaths which occurred over 6 months ago are not listed.)

Background and Eligibility - Official Korean Veterans Association KVA (Seoul) Revisit Program

Background

The Korea Revisit program was begun by the Korean Veterans Association (KVA, Seoul) in 1975, the 25th Anniversary year of the outbreak of the Korean War, to express their gratitude to veterans of the Korean War and to show them the bountiful results of their sacrifices and devotion.

KVA Eligibility

A. Korean War veterans and/or war correspondents of the 21 nations which came to the assistant of the Republic of Korea between June 25, 1950 and July 27, 1953.

B. Immediate family member of those killed in action in the Korean War.

Note: You are eligible to take a spouse or one immediate descendant with you. (Not a sister, brother, companion or friend.)

The family member must be housed in the same hotel room with you in Seoul. (Descendants must be over 18.)

Privileges Extended Courtesy of KVA

A. Hotel accommodations (2 persons per room), meals, tours, and transportation while in Korea for 6 days and 5 nights.

B. Tour of Seoul and its vicinity: itinerary includes visits of Pannmunjom, North Korean Invasion Tunnels, Korean War Memorial Monument, National Cemetery, National Museum, Korean Folk Village, Korean War Museum, plus other cultural/industrial facilities and activities in the Seoul area. (Other tours of battles sites and/or Inchon may be made through the local tour guide).

C. A special reception and dinner hosted by the President of the Korean Veterans Association (KVA) during which the Korean War Medal and Certificate of Ambassador for Peace will be awarded to each veteran. (Who have not received it before!).

Miscellaneous

A. The KVA Revisit Program privileges are provided for scheduled groups only.

B. Participants are required to be in possession of a valid passport. (A visa is not required for visits to Korea of 15 days or less.)

C. KVA (Seoul) is not responsible for any loss of, or damage to personal or other items, medical expenses, injuries, or loss of life due to any accident of whatever nature during the revisits. Trip insurance is available and recommended.

D. The cost of the airline ticket must be borne by each individual visitor who will fly with the group.

E. Applications will be received/accepted on a “First-come, First-serve” basis.

Note: If you have previously accepted an official KVA (Seoul) Revisit tour from any sponsoring association or group) - you are not currently eligible to participate again. The reason for this is obvious; there are many veterans that have not gone before so, they get their “first right of return!” KVA Seoul now has all former revisit returnees in a computer database, so please don’t try and beat the system. We may not know it, and submit your name to KVA (Seoul), only to have it rejected. This could cause embarrassment for all of us, as well as, create a delay that could cause a bonafide Korean War veteran to miss the opportunity.

F. Those desiring to use frequent flier miles (or other means of “Free” air transportation) will be required to pay a $ 100.00 (per person) administrative processing fee. Caution: Not traveling with the KWA group air contract, can result in much higher Post Tour costs to China and other Pacific locations!

My book is set in a wartime period, the Korean War, and the clandestine airborne operations that were conducted. Of course, if one studies the terrain on the Peninsula of Korea, especially the northern portion, it is easy to see the terrain’s influence on operations by planners and operational staffs in both BAKER SECTION and AVIARY, the two operational elements that conducted the airborne missions.

From the planner’s standpoint, the mountainous terrain offered potentially good sustaining bases for the partisan, while the airborne planners looked for small, reasonably secure drop zones in these mountainous areas. Additionally, both coasts of North Korea also offered a chance for the air dropped team to exfiltrate and be picked-up by off-shore boats that were standing by for their recovery. The other more difficult escape alternative was land exfiltration through both enemy and friendly lines where many agents were inadvertently killed or wounded by friendly forces. The resort to clandestine airborne missions, against targets that were accessible resulted in a great loss of personnel.

A few words need to be devoted to the US personnel who participated in these operations. Some lost their lives, some were critically wounded and disabled for life, some became prisoners of war, while the remainder finished their military careers and also fought several times again before retiring. These men are heroes and deserve great praise for their service that was so closely held as secret until the past few years.

Sacrificial Lambs

By Raymond C. Colton, Sr.

Pusan Perimeter

A rush of thoughts went through my mind as we headed back to action. “I don’t want to die. I am only eighteen years old.” I’ve never married, never been treated as an adult. I never completed my education. I never had sex with the girl back home. I don’t want to die, but I don’t want to let my buddies down. I don’t want to be judged yellow. As scared as I am, I don’t have a choice. I must face the worst danger and try to be the type of soldier that I always dreamed I would be. I know I have lots of company.

With the way that we were trained and equipped, and with our grand pay of seventy-two dollars a month, it’s asking a lot for us to go through hell day and night. Also, you must realize that we had been offered up as “sacrificial lambs” who must die, if need be, to buy a few more days for our Army to get more soldiers to the action. Certainly, the United States, a great world power, could not stand the embarrassment of defeat by a peasant army. Our military was in a horrible state thanks to budget cuts. Beyond safety and common sense, little else mattered. Our best equipment and highly-trained troops were all in Europe where the Russians presented the only danger that Washington was able to see. Since a price had to be paid, we were directed to pay the price for this bungling error, and pay we did. Our three weakest regiments were chopped to pieces in early July at Osan, Pyongtaek Kum River, Taejon and our division commander became a prisoner of war. Those who were not dead, wounded, or prisoners of war, made their tortured way back to Yongdong where we met the First Cavalry Division, also weak and totally unaware of the hell that was about to swoop down upon them. My day of horror came on 25 of April.

Shortly after the beginning of the firefight, we heard the first mortar round thump as it was fired. It struck on the front slope. Seconds later, round two was fired and fell on the back slope directly to our rear. I heard the thump of the third round and seconds later, I was floating in an orange cloud. Shortly after, consciousness returned to me and was followed with the feeling of a hot poker going through my chest. That’s how it felt to be hit, but the good part was very little consciousness to have to suffer through. The medic was crying because he was out of just about everything, including morphine surrettes. Believe me, medics take their jobs seriously and they were some of the greatest heroes in Korea.

Korea, I was there

By Harold L. Gamble

The Book

KOREA, THE LAND OF THE MORNING CALM

We made port in Pusan, Korea, just before lunchtime on Monday, 21 July 1950, without further incident. As the ship was docking, I was standing by the railing watching the activities when my view was suddenly drawn to a Korean woman sitting on the dock next to a building. She smiled up at us. She had a small baby in her arms. As she held the baby, I noticed that she was picking lice nits from the hair of her baby and as she did this, she would look up and smile at us. Welcome to Korea! These civilians were all refugees crowding the dock. Where were they going? Better yet, where could they go? This was for all practical purposes, the end of the line for them.

The war in simple terms was on the doorsteps of Pusan. We of the 29th Infantry, in a scant few hours, would become embroiled in some terrible events and in one of the bloodiest wars of this century. When we departed the ship, it was in two sections for each battalion. The first off would march to the train depot and ride to Chinju with the second section traveling by road convoy to Chinju.

When our convoy departed the dock area and moved through Pusan, the crowds along the roadside were unbelievable. Koreans were standing side by side as far as I could see. They were cheering us on. I have never seen so many people.

I was a medic in the Pacific Theater during WWII and I wanted our medical platoon to have weapons to protect themselves and our wounded.

THE HADONG MASSACRE

The 3rd Battalion 29th Infantry Regiment was ordered to Hadong to clear out some 300 Communist guerrillas. They departed just shortly after midnight. The unit was commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Harold Mott and in his company was General Chae, who had just been relieved as Commanding General of the South Korean forces. He would act as guide and interpreter since he was familiar with the area. Even so, this did not help the men of the 3rd Battalion. They would fall into one of the worst massacres of a modern military unit in recent history.

At the Hadong Pass, most of the battalion staff officers were killed or wounded. No one was left to give direction and leadership. The command of the battalion was passed to Captain Sharra. By that time, there was much confusion and the troops were surrounded on three sides.

The focus of Gamble’s book is the grit and heroism of the men he served with. Even against overwhelming odds, they persisted to achieve their military objectives. The greatest crises for the unit were the devastating ambushes at Anui and Chinju Pass, and the battle for the Pusan Perimeter. Included in the book are the extended accounts of two prisoners of war who were freed after years in captivity.

Tending the wounded and dying for more than two years left Gamble with a permanently heavy heart and a desire that others should know of the greatness of the 29th Infantry in Korea.

(I will stop here and only tell you that history relates to Jul 25-26 Hadong Ambush. 29th Regimental Combat Team (RCT) is committed to combat near Chinju, and its 3rd 3n. (757 men) are decimated: 313 KIA and 100 captured. Many personal stories can be found in this book on that battle and many more. Many POW stories of men in his unit is covered in the Book. I bet some of them were with my twin brother who was captured on the 1st of December and went to Camp #5 also.

The stories lead me to believe this. A POW mentions a driver by name from my battery “D” of the 82nd AAA Bn. I did not know him by name. A special book about true heroes of the Korean War. Harold wants America to remember our war and their experiences. 335 pages of text. The above text will give you great insight of events experienced by Harold and his unit. This book can be purchased for $20.00 plus $2.00 S & H. Contact Harold Gamble, 475 7th Ave. Pleasant Grove, Al 35127. Tel: 205-744-0159. Editor.)

Tent Pegs and 2nd Lieutenants

By John W. Harper

Introduction

As listed in the chronology at the end of this introduction, the Korean War began on June 25, 1950, when the North Korean Peoples Army invaded South Korea. The most dramatic events all took place within the first year of fighting, leading too many people to believe that there was no real war thereafter.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Thousands on both sides were killed and wounded during the following two-plus years, as real estate changed hands and the armies battled for a position of strength to take to the armistice negotiating tables during the interminable “peace” talks.

These memoirs and stories begin in July 1951, when I joined the First Marine Division in North Korea. During the preceding period of April, May and June, the Division had been in continuous action against the attacking Chinese Communist Forces and the North Korean Peoples Army. The Marine Division was part of the United Nations forces, which had defeated and forced into retreat this third powerful offensive by the Communist armies.

In July, the respective armies had stabilized their front lines while attempting “cease-fire and armistice” talks.

In August, 1951, the negotiations fell apart. The United Nations forces resumed their attacks deeper into North Korea. Within months, the attacks forced the Communist armies to resume negotiations. By late 1951, both armies had assumed static, “stand-off” postures.

NORTH KOREA - SEPTEMBER 20-21 1951

We had trained all summer until September 6, when the Marine Division had deployed to join the renewed UN attacks into North Korea. Our Battalion had been held in reserve or in support of other attack Battalions the previous fourteen days. The NKPs still showed fight after weeks of UN and Marine Division attacks. On September 20, our Battalion had been ordered to assault a ridge, officially Hill 854, designated by its height in meters. Our Company would climb it, attack and drive the NKPs off its top or
I had command of a rifle Platoon. The coming assault would be my first, if the NKPA rear guard stood its ground. More than a numbered topographic feature, Hill 854 dominated a chain of ridges which formed a natural line of defense in North Korea; a “frontier of state” for whoever held it.

The day of our attack the Company stepped off at a gentlemanly 0800 hours. The gravel road and bright Indian summer day made for good marching. The weather would allow close air support. I hadn’t thought about that advantage, but someone else had.

(I stopped the battle story so you can enjoy this and 109 more pages of interesting personal experiences of the later years of the Korean War in the John Harpers words as I did. Look for Tent Pegs and 2nd Lieutenants at your local bookstore, or on Amazon.com.)

Museum Donations

Education and research was featured in our report last month. Our museum and our 50th Anniversary Observation will be featured this month. Our museum has been displaying the many artifacts being sent in by veterans across the United States. We have uniforms, guns, paintings, pictures and personal mementoes from many veterans. There are too many to list, but I would like to tell about some of the special artifacts that have been received lately.

Glenn Bitzer of Sparks, MD donated a North Korean flag made by a POW. He was sent overseas April, ‘52, when he joined Co. A, 64th TKN at Ujonbu May 3, ‘52. On May 5 he was moved by train to Pusan, where he boarded LST for trip to Koje-Do. He participated in restoring order after the prisoners rioted. One of the prisoners was waving the flag and gave it to Glenn. Glenn was a Gunner, Tank Cmdr. Areas of operations were Chorwon and Kumwha Units supported were 1st ROK Division and 9th ROK Division.

George L. Parks, Decatur, IL, donated a 3.5 Rocket Launcher. The Launcher is a very early M20 Model. Later lighter models were light aluminum with a different sight, and BiPod Legs, no protection plate and other modifications. He also donated several models of planes. Mr. Parks is a member of the KWVN&L and volunteers on weekends.

During our 50th Commemoration Banquet on June 7, 2003, Mr. Gil Isham presented a ceremonial staff honoring all Native American Korean War Veterans to the KWVN&L. Mr. Isham, is a KW veteran and a member of the KWVN&L. The ceremonial staff represents the Oneida, Menominee, Potawatomi, Winnebago and the Chippewa tribes. Mr. Isham spent two years accumulating the feathers and wood for the staff. He assembled it in four days. Mr. Isham presented the staff to our President Jere Crise to be placed in the museum. (See photo lower right.)

We are still looking for donations of Korean War airplane models we could hang from the ceiling of the museum and library.

Sharon E. Corum
Executive Secretary

The Korean War Veterans Association Executive Council at Branson, MO on October 6, 2002 passed a resolution stating their support for the Korean War Veterans National Museum and Library and requested that all Korean War veterans support the fund raising for the construction of the museum and library.

Mr. Charles Krohn, the Deputy Chief Public Affairs Civ from the Department of the Army Office of the Chief of Public Affairs, assumed oversight for the Department of Defense 50th Anniversary of the Korean War Commemoration Committee on 19 June 2003. Colonel Mary Joyce Mason assumed the role as Chief of Staff for the Committee and is responsible for its day to day operation.

Major General Nels Running (Retired) served as the Executive Director of the Department of Defense 50th Anniversary of the Korean War Commemoration Committee for three years. Sadly, his term ended 18 June 2003. Major General Running (Retired) did a magnificent job while serving as the Executive Director. He worked untiringly to thank and honor our Korean War veterans and their families for the sacrifices made over 50 years ago. He also spent numerous hours educating the American public about the Korean War veterans’ great sacrifices and accomplishments that guaranteed the Republic of Korea’s security and independence. During his tenure as Executive Director, more than 13,000 commemoration partners joined the DOD 50th Anniversary of the Korean War Commemoration Committee in thanking and honoring Korean War Veterans and their families. A series of nation-wide educational events and commemoration programs were flawlessly conducted across America. These events included memorial services, parades, symposiums, receptions, media presentations, and various public displays. Major General Running (Retired) provided guidance as his staff began extensive planning for several special weekend events for 25-27 July 2003 which marks the 50th anniversary of the signing of the armistice. Major General Running (Retired) rendered outstanding service as the Executive Director and will be sorely missed.

ABOUT THE BOOK

The Operation AVIARY story details the activities of US Army Rangers, WWII Airborne veterans and Special Forces trained personnel. Additionally it reveals the airborne experiences of Korean partisans, agents and Chinese agents who worked behind the lines, throughout the period of hostilities, as a force multiplier. Personnel losses were great and the activities of Soviet advisors are revealed that no doubt influenced these losses. A must read for the personnel of today’s Special Operations Forces.

Endorsement by General James Lindsay, United States Army,

First Commander—First Commander-In-Chief, United States Special Operations Command.

Doug Dillard has done a great job of bringing to light a little known, but vital facet of special operations activities during the Korean War. Successes of our special operations forces in recent operations, such as Afghanistan, are the direct result of the pioneering efforts of soldiers such as Doug Dillard. We are deeply indebted to him and others like him for their vision, courage and dedication. We own Doug Dillard a special thanks for recording his experiences, researching airborne operations and writing this significant history of special operation.

Endorsement by Major General Nets Running, USAF. Executive Director, DOD, Korean War Commemoration Committee.

The history of the Korean War remains unknown to far too many who owe gratitude to those whose courage, commitment and sacrifices secured a victory for freedom and democracy over communist aggression. Even deeper in the shadows of the unknown, lay the clandestine operations of ‘special forces’, whose actions often serve to enhance the conventional forces’. The men of “Operation AVIARY” were indeed force multipliers whose actions contributed immeasurably to the United Nations Command’s victory over communist aggression.

Limited Objectives & Digging In. (Hill Wars)

Through 1952 through 53, the two sides continued the pattern of patrols, probes, raids and limited-objective attacks that had characterized operations since November 1951. Van Fleet had his corps commanders take full advantage of reduced operations to improve their defenses. U.N. troops moved bunkers below the crest of hills, strengthened them to withstand light shelling from artillery and mortars, and repositioned automatic weapons to obtain the best fields of fire. Intelligence indicated the communists were doing the same thing, in many places extending the depth of their works 20 miles to the rear. In addition, the enemy forces brought forward more artillery and improved their techniques of massing fire. In one month alone, an estimated 102,000 artillery and mortar rounds fell on Eighth Army positions. In the mean time, U.N. forces tried ruses to inflict losses. In some cases, they withdrew outposts in the face of Chinese probes, allowed the enemy to occupy the abandoned positions, and then hit them with presighted artillery. Within an hour, the Chinese and North Koreans usually retreated with heavy casualties.
