From the President

Larry Kinard

As I write this, July 4th/Independence Day celebrations and parades are in the air. Sitting here in my home I can hear the fireworks exploding at the baseball park a short distance south of us. Our chapter on this July 4th holiday took part in one of the best parades in Texas, in the city of Arlington. It is estimated that our three-mile route was lined by about 50,000 people, many of whom waved, applauded, and said “Thank you for your service” as we passed by. Many of our members had a chance during this time to experience this same kind of welcome.

It is time again for all of us to count our blessings and realize that we live in a great country. Even though things don’t always go the way we think they should, we still have freedom and opportunity that most of the people in the world don’t have.

Director Tom McHugh, National Ceremonies Chairman, Director Art Griffith’s Color Guard, and I took part in the Memorial Day service in Washington DC by laying a wreath at our Memorial and also at the Tomb of the Unknowns. To me, these events are solemn and necessary moments that we must continue to be a part of to show that we still remember those who paid the ultimate sacrifice during the Korean War.

We had a large group of people at our Memorial that day who participated in the wreath laying ceremony with us. During that trip, I also met with representatives from the DoD who briefed several of us on the final trip. I also met with representatives from the DoD who briefed several of us on the final trip and briefed several of us on the final trip. I also met with representatives from the DoD who briefed several of us on the final trip. I also met with representatives from the DoD who briefed several of us on the final trip. I also met with representatives from the DoD who briefed several of us on the final trip.

The Transition Team that I mentioned in my last letter met in the DFW area on June 12 to work on several issues that needed to be addressed before the July meeting. The primary outcome of the meeting was to have a Business without a Meeting of the Board to address before the July meeting. The pri-mary outcome of the meeting was to have a Business without a Meeting of the Board to take action on some important concerns. During the last week in June the Board did that and decided on the following items:

1. Approved moving both the 1st VP to the office of President and 2nd VP to 1st VP with title and responsibility

2. Approve a recommendation that had been proposed during the March Board meeting in Syracuse to move the KWVA financial, accounting and bookkeeping activities to the Membership Office in Charleston, Illinois to eliminate having to transfer these functions with every change of administration.

3. Approved the appointment of Tom Gregg as Treasurer in order to relocate the function closer to the President’s office

4. Approved the appointment of John “Sonny” Edwards to replace Director Frank Williams, who has resigned due to serious family problems and could not attend the Board meetings

John Edwards ran for Director in the most recent election. According to the By-laws, he was the primary candidate for the vacant position. All these actions will help us move forward.

A week after the Transition Team meeting my wife and I left the DFW airport to attend the 63rd Commemoration of the beginning of the war and a meeting of the International Federation of Korean War Veteran Associations in Seoul, Korea. We had been invited by the KVA to attend as a delegate to the 9th General Assembly Meeting of the IFKWVA, which meets every five years. These delegates are generally Presidents of the respective KWVA organizations in each of the countries who supplied troops or services in Korea during the war.

The main item on their agenda was the consideration of whether to continue the international organization because of the age of all the members and their declining ability to attend the international meetings. The two options presented were:

1. continue the way it is going and let it die a natural death
2. allow descendents to become involved and take over the leadership at some time in the future.

The group voted almost unanimously to get descendents involved and challenge them to carry on the legacy of the Korean War.

We are faced with the same concern in our organization. At some point we will need to make a similar choice. The Korean government is very supportive of the decision and at this point will continue to fund the Federation.

Two very good things about the trip were that it was funded by the KVA and MPVA and Professor Jongwoo Han arranged a meeting with Pantech CEO BY Park so I could personally thank him for his generous donation made early this year.

When you read this the July meeting will already have come and gone. This has been a great year for the Korean War veterans. With Congress naming this the “Year of the Korean War Veteran” and having the DoD funded to assist us in so many ways, I feel we have come a long way from the days of the “Forgotten War.” Even though we have had a few problems recently, we have elevated the awareness and acceptance of our organization to a point that we haven’t had in the past.

Also, I am sure many of you feel as I do that this may truly be one of our last big opportunities to be recognized for what we did. The DoD 60th Anniversary Committee will cease to exist in September, along with the effort and funding that has been provided since 2010. We owe a lot of gratitude to General Walter Sharp and Colonel David Clark and their very capable staff for what they have done for us. It will be up to us to continue the momentum and recognition they generated during this time.

In closing, I thank the KWVA Board of Directors and all those who have helped and supported me over this past couple of months as we move forward.

This has been a great year for the Korean War veterans.

With Congress naming this the “Year of the Korean War Veteran” and having the DoD funded to assist us in so many ways, I feel we have come a long way from the days of the “Forgotten War.”

(1) Approved moving both the 1st VP to the office of President and 2nd VP to 1st VP with title and responsibility

The Department of Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office (DPMO) announced today that the remains of a serviceman missing from the Korean War have been identified and returned to his family for burial with full military honors.

Army Sgt. Bernard J. Fisher of Wilkes Barre, Pa., was buried July 16, in Arlington National Cemetery. In January 1951, Fisher and elements of Company L, 3rd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment (IR), 24th Infantry Division (ID), were deployed northeast of Seoul, South Korea, where they were attacked by enemy forces. During the 19th IR attempt to delay the enemy forces from advancing, Fisher and his unit moved towards a more defensible position, when the unit suffered heavy losses. It was during this attack, that Fisher was reported missing.

In July 1951, the U.S. Army Graves Registration recovered the remains of four men north of Shaha-dong, near Seoul, South Korea. The remains were buried in the United Nations Cemetery at Tanggok, South Korea, and were disinterred and transferred to the U.S. Army’s Central Identification Unit in Kokura, Japan for laboratory analysis.

During the analysis the remains of three men could not be positively identified. In March 1955, a military review board declared the remains of the fourth to be unidentifiable. The unidentified remains were transferred to Hawaii, where they were interred as “unknown” at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, also known as the “Punchbowl.”

In 2012, U.S. officials reevaluated Fisher’s records and determined that with advances in technology, the unknown remains could likely be identified. Following the reevaluation, the decision was made to exhume the remains for scientific analysis identification.

In the identification of the remains, scientists from the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command (JPAC) used circumstantial evidence and forensic identification tools, such as dental comparison and chest radiograph which matched Fisher’s records.

Using modern technology, identifications continue to be made from remains that were previously turned over by North Korean officials. Today, more than 7,900 Americans remain unaccounted for from the Korean War.

For additional information on the Defense Department’s mission to account for missing Americans, visit the DPMO web site at http://www.dtic.mil/dpmo or call 703-699-1420.
Egg Fried Rice and the Significance of the Korean War

By Zhen-Gang Ji, Ph.D., P.E.

This year marks the 60th anniversary of the end of the Korean War (1950–1953). There are a variety of theories on the significance of the Korean War. Based on the historic facts, I believe that the most significant and lasting impact of the Korean War on the world is from the killing of a young interpreter in the Chinese Army in an air raid by the U.S. Air Force. His death was triggered by a bowl of egg fried rice.

Mr. Yang Di was the deputy director of the Warfare Office at Chinese Army Headquarters in Korea (the official name is the Chinese People’s Volunteer Army). He experienced that air raid and witnessed the death of the interpreter. Yang Di’s memoir gives the most details of the death of the interpreter, and is also supported by and consistent with recollections of other Chinese officers who were at the scene.

General Kim Il Sung, the North Korean leader from 1948 to his death in 1994, sent a basket of fresh chicken eggs to Peng Dehuai, the Commander in Chief of the Chinese Army in Korea, at dusk of November 24, 1950. Fresh eggs were a rare and precious commodity during the war. Since Peng had already had dinner, the eggs were left untouched.

The next morning, Yang Di saw cooking smoke rising from Peng’s office. Since it was strictly prohibited to cook during daytime to avoid the smoke exposing the location of the headquarters, Yang Di rushed into the office, where he saw three junior officers cooking egg fried rice. He asked who dared to eat the eggs of the Commander in Chief and cause so much smoke. The answer was that the officer who served as the Russian language interpreter did.

Yang Di, who did know the real identification of the interpreter at that time, was very unhappy and ordered the young officers to put out the fire and run to the air shelter, since the air alarm signaled an imminent air raid. But the young interpreter ignored his order and did not run to the shelter. Moments later, U.S. bombers appeared in the sky. They did not circle for targets, as they usually did, and started to drop napalm bombs.

The first bomb was a direct hit on Peng’s office, which burst immediately into flames. The interpreter was killed; his body burned beyond recognition; and he was only identified by the Soviet Union-made watch on his wrist.

It was the 33rd day of his tour of duty in Korea. He was 28 years old; his name was Mao Anying, the eldest son of Chairman Mao Zedong, who was the Chinese leader from 1949 to his death in 1976. According to my recent research

‘You Didn’t Die In Vain’

As we observe the 60th anniversary of the Korean War cease fire, we once again remember our comrades who paid the ultimate price for freedom. I composed the poem below prior to the first “Korean War Gathering” in Washington DC in 1985 that Bill Norris and I coordinated. Our efforts were successful, and the Korean War Veterans Association became a reality.

As the efforts in Massachusetts that I organized in 1984 to recognize the Korean War veterans expanded, I and other veterans were responsible for the design and funding for the Massachusetts Korean War Veterans Memorial in Charlestown, MA, adjacent to the USS Constitution in Shipyard Park.

An article in the May-June 2006 edition of The Graybeards (starting on p. 32) outlines my involvement with Bill Norris and our efforts to organize the first reunion of Korean War veterans.

KOREA - THE FORGOTTEN WAR

A folded flag, a telegram; some letters tied with string
A Purple Heart, your photograph - a graduation ring
Souvenirs and memories are all that remain
You served with pride and honor - you didn't die in vain

Broken hearts and empty dreams, funeral cars and limousines
The Honor Guard, the echoed sounds of three successive rifle rounds
The sound of taps in the winter snow
Vivid memories of a time so long ago

You were so young to go to war and die so far away
I often think of others, too, who lost their lives that way.
The bugle shrieks and charging hoards; The Yalu River - “Chosin Reservoir”
“Pork Chop Hill” and “Heartbreak Ridge;” prison camps and Freedom Bridge

Freedom's price is always high - some are wounded, others die
Blinded eyes and shattered bones; hospitals and nursing homes
You rest in peace - there's no more pain; no bitter cold or monsoon rain
No heavy pack or bandoliers; no sleepless nights and lurking fears

No hand grenades or bayonets; no eerie shadows or silhouettes
No fire fights or night patrol
Just silence now - God rest your soul

Welcome To Cresaptown, MD©

“You mean there is a part of Maryland that is west of Baltimore?” That is what I asked the caller when he explained to me where Cresaptown, Maryland is located.

Whoa! Let me back up a minute. I was sitting in my office minding my own business, which is a rare event, when a gentleman called me from Frostburg, MD. “Would you like to be the keynote speaker at our dedication ceremony?” he asked.

“Sure,” I replied. “I have a couple questions: what are you dedicating, to whom are you dedicating it, and why me?”

“Well, you are the editor of a Korean War magazine and we are dedicating a part of a highway in Cresaptown to a local native and Marine, ‘Bull’ Evans, who fought in Korea,” he said. “So, we thought you would be the ideal person to speak at the event.”

“So,” I thought, “you couldn’t find anyone else to speak.” But, the thought of traveling 433 miles from Rocky Hill CT to Cresaptown, a place I’d never heard of, to speak about a person I’d never heard of, sounded intriguing—especially since that person was a legendary U.S. Marine. I, too, was a U.S. Marine, albeit far from legendary, even in my own mind. Semper Fi and all that.

And so I ended up in Cresaptown, MD on Saturday, June 29, 2013 to fill in for a sur-mental exploit deserve to be commemorated in communities small and large, like Cresaptown. All it takes is a group of dedicated citizens to start the process. That’s what happened in a beautiful town in western Maryland, which I never would have discovered were it not for a Marine I never met except through a well-crafted family history and the graciousness of some extraordinary local citizens.

Yes, there is a part of Maryland west of Baltimore. How many other places west, east, north, or south of Baltimore are waiting to honor their local heroes—and isn’t it time to start the process?

Who Ever Thought Climbing Poles Could Be So Exciting?

Repairing telephone lines at Camp 5, the Prisoner of War camp where I was assigned, was necessary on the hottest of hot days, the darkest nights, and in the rainiest of weather. We never knew what could happen; all we knew was that the damaged lines had to be repaired.

Crashed airplanes often tore out lines, causing us to walk through a mine field at night or “spurring” halfway down a creosoted pole, then falling the rest of the way. On the way down we would often pick up splinters that were so big we would end up at our 514 medical hospital, which was similar to the one viewers saw on the popular TV show M.A.S.H.

One time when I was there, a good doctor, a Captain, who was on recall from the reserves of WWII, treated me. I had developed blood poisoning in my left arm as the result of a splinter. The doctor had to perform surgery to remove the splinter, then administer penicillin and tetanus shots. My arm was in a sling for a week, but it was not all bad. I did not have to do any pole climbing or guard duty. On the other hand, eating was difficult—especially since I’m left handed.

Do I Have A Target On My Back?

Sgt. Daniels and I were on a routine line check when we noticed a wire hanging down. I climbed up the pole and tied the line back up. Suddenly, I heard a snap.

I yelled down to Sgt. Daniels, “What was that?”

Then, I heard another snap, like the sound we heard in basic training: the whine of a bullet going by close—too close. Next, something hit the pole just inches from my head.

“Noble,” Sgt. Daniels yelled, “get the hell down off that pole. Someone is making you a target. Get down now!”

He didn’t have to issue that order twice. I slid down the pole in record time and dropped into a rice paddy full of water.

Sgt. Daniels and I trekked back to camp and he reported the incident to headquarters. The brass launched an investigation, which involved sending out a small squad of men comprising three American and three Koreans (ROK). They did not find anything, except a place where someone had hunkered down into what looked like a firing position. Who? Was it a Korean, and if so, friendly or???

Friend Or Foe?

Our camp, being a prisoner of war camp, was subject to raids both night and day, and we never knew who might be in or around it or whether they were friendly. For example, one of the top interpreters for the camp was a South Korean who was fluent in English, Japanese, and the North and South Korean dialects. His appearance was always trim and neat and very polite.

When the war was over, South Korean Army officials arrested him. They tried and convicted him—and shot him right on our camp grounds. It turned out that he was a double agent working for the North Korean government!

We just never knew for sure!

Tunnel Vision

I was a gunner mate aboard the R.B. Anderson (DD 786) from March 1951 to October 1954. I went aboard Anderson at sea via high line—in a combat zone. The crew’s greeting was simple: “Welcome aboard—free income tax.”

During my tour of service, we made three six-month tours to the Korean combat zone. Part of our duties involved destroying tunnels and trains above the 38th Parallel. The Army directed our firepower. The North Koreans managed to open the tunnels as fast as we closed them.

In July 1953, off the coast of Korea, we received word that a truce had been signed. We were all elated, knowing that we had done our part in this cold, miserable part of the world.

Crew members of Richard B. Anderson in Yokosuka, Japan, who served together for approximately 3 1/2 years from 1951-54 (Back, L-R) Stratman (IN); Crain (OH); Unknown; Henegar (TN); Unknown; Troop (KY); Wedding (IN); Thompson (OR) (Front, L-R) Keller (OH); Miller (TN); McDonald (AL); Cantrell (TX); Rader (SD); Davis (MO); Jensen (MT); Franec (OK); Unknown

Many Korean War veterans insist that what they did in Korea was simply their jobs. They were not looking for any particular thanks; all they wanted was credit for saving a nation from communism. Their jobs varied; their memories of them are clear.
The Richard B. Anderson was a 2,250-ton destroyer. Its major firepower consisted of two 5-inch 38 twin turrets forward and one 5-inch 38 single twin turret aft, each with a range of five miles. The word was that we gave North Korea hell.

Just as an aside, Richard B. Anderson played a role in the movie “Caine Mutiny,” starring Humphrey Bogart, Fred MacMurray, Jose Ferrer, Van Johnson, May Wynn (pictured below) et al. It was shown backing out from the pier at the end of the movie. (A bit of trivia. The real name of the actress who played the role of May Wynn in the movie was Donna Lee Hickey. After she won the role of May Wynn, she adopted the character’s name for future roles.)

Finally, I participated in an Honor Air trip in 2011. Honor Air is a nonprofit organization that provides a trip for WWII and Korean War veterans from their home cities to Washington DC to see the war memorial monuments and the Changing of the Guard Ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknowns. My trip included 125 veterans from those two wars. It was filled with fun and war stories.

EDITOR’S NOTE: According to DANFS Dictionary of American Naval Fighting Ships), Richard B. Anderson spent a great deal of time in Korea. Here is part of its pedigree. (The destroyer was a WWII veteran.)

Richard B. Anderson returned to the United States in June. Hostilities broke out in Korea soon thereafter and on 19 February 1951 she sailed west again with Destroyer Division 12 (DesDiv 12).

On 12 March, she arrived at Sasebo, and 2 days later joined TF 77 off the east coast of the embattled peninsula. Into April she served as escort and plane guard for the carriers launching strikes against North Korean and Chinese forces, power sources and supply, industrial, and transport centers. At Yokosuka in mid April, she was back off Korea for an amphibious feint against the mining and transport center of Tanchon at the end of the month. In May, she conducted ASW (Antisubmarine Warfare) exercises off Japan and Okinawa, and in June, she operated as a unit of the Taiwan Strait Patrol. During July she conducted hunter-killer (HUK) exercises; then, in August, she resumed operations with TF 77 and spent the last weeks of her deployment off Korea.

The destroyer arrived at San Diego on 30 September. Seven months later she headed back across the Pacific, again stopping in Hawaii. On 12 June 1952 she rejoined TF 77 and, with an interruption for a railway interdiction mission on the 25th, remained with the carriers into July. On 9 July she returned to Japan; conducted ASW exercises south of there until the 31st; then steamed for Keelung and another tour of patrol duty in the Taiwan Strait. On 21 August she was back off Korea, as a unit of TF 95, the U.N. Blockade and Escort Force. On the 23d she shifted from Wonsan to Songjin and on the 27th she rejoined TF 77. Detached on the 30th, she part pated [sic; participated] in support operations along the bombline until the 2d, then, on the 3d, headed back to Yokosuka. At midmonth she moved to Hakodate, Hokkaido, for HUK operations and at the end of the month she rejoined TF 77. With two interruptions for harassment and interdiction missions, she remained with TF 77 until the 18th, then joined TF 70 for operations south of Japan. In November, she resumed operations with the carriers of TF 77.

After Korea, Richard B. Anderson alternated between duty with the 7th Fleet in the western Pacific (WestPac) and training operations and regular overhauls on the west coast.

Not My Fault: Asphalt

I was a U.S. Air Force member at Taegu assigned to the 822nd Eng. Av. Bn.—at an asphalt plant. Yes, asphalt!

I was on a one-year Harry Truman extension to my three-year enlistment. Remember, this was not a “war.” It was a “Police Action.”

We were not issued work boots or high-top work shoes at the plant. I wrote to my dad and told him I needed some boots. My mother told me he was pretty irate—not at me, but at the Army.

Chow was horrible at the base. It often consisted of biscuits with stewed tomatoes. (Does anyone remember this?)

Fortunately, I caught a lucky break at Taegu. I met a Captain from my former base, Williams Air Force Base in Chandler, AZ. He was on flying status. He secured me a transfer to Yon Do Goe with the 61st Air Force Base Group. I did not miss the asphalt plant.

I rotated back to the U.S. in May 1952. My one year in Korea persuaded me not to re-enlist. The country was not ready for this “Police Action,” for which it had no planning.

En Route To Yalu

I and my good friend Charles Oden, now deceased, were serving in the 3rd Battalion, 7th Regiment of the First Cavalry Division when the photo below appeared in the October 19, 1950 Boston Evening American (also deceased). The action took place during the advance from the break-out from the Nakto River perimeter (aka the Pusan perimeter), reportedly the longest advance in the shortest period of time in the history of the U.S. Army at that time.

One of the Soldiers pictured, Joseph Barca, who served in the Army from 1946 to 1952, wrote, “When this picture was published, we had already entered Pyongyang and continued north to the Yalu river. I took part in the first five campaigns of the war and have five Bronze Battle Stars.”

The Mystery Of The Trees

I was drafted into the U.S. Army in April 1953 and sent eventually to Korea. I was assigned to the 2nd Infantry Division as a truck driver for an artillery battery near Wejonbu. I remained with the division for a little over one year, until it was called back to the states.

Unfortunately, the division didn’t take me with it, since I didn’t have enough time in Korea to rotate. Instead, I was reassigned to the Eighth Army, again as a truck driver.

One of my jobs was to deliver hundreds of pounds of rice in a 2-1/2-ton truck to American and ROK Soldiers. Most of the deliveries were routine. Then, I was assigned with two Korean civilians to drive to a location in a large wooded forest. It was not my usual assignment.

His Prayers Were Answered

Lewis J. Bertke was drafted on January 30th, 1952. He did his basic training at Fort Jackson, SC. After a 2-1/2-week furlough he was shipped to Camp Stoneman, arriving there on July 4, 1952. About two weeks later he was at Camp Drake, Japan, from where he was shipped to Pusan. Next, he was transferred to an LST headed for Koji Do and assigned to D Company, guarding communist POWs.

At a Sunday Mass, the chaplain announced he was taking names for a new assistant. Bertke applied. Two weeks later, he was transferred to his new job as chaplain’s assistant for Father Robert Feeney. In that capacity, he drove the chaplain on the front lines, visited the wounded at the aid stations, assisted the chaplain with his daily mass schedule, and took him to talk to the patrols before they were sent out at night.

Bertke rotated back to the States on June 7, 1953, arriving at Fort Lewis, WA on June 26th. After a 30-day furlough he report-ed to Camp Atterbury, IN. He was sent from there to Fort Riley, KS, where he was discharged on October 30, 1953.

Robert McKeever on a night shift in Korea

Robert McKeever, 1083 E. Rio Mesa Tr., Cottonwood, AZ 86326
When we arrived several more Koreans joined us. They all started loading very large trees on to my truck. Once the bed of the vehicle was loaded they completely covered the cargo. The two civilians climbed back into the truck and off we went.

I drove for about an hour or so until we reached an area that was blocked by American and ROK MPs. They stopped my truck and told us all to get off it. One MP looked into the back of the vehicle, came back to us, handcuffed the two Koreans, and placed them in a Korean MP jeep. I was a bit puzzled.

The American MPs explained to me that the Koreans had been arrested because cutting down trees was illegal. In fact, it was punishable by death. So, workers unloaded all the trees from my truck and the MPs told me I was free to go. They didn’t have to tell me twice.

I returned to my company and told my sergeants what had happened. That was the last I ever heard of the incident.

Ultimately, I spent eighteen months in Korea. I returned to the states on December 24, 1954 and joined the Manhattan Beach, CA Police department. I never did get to investigate the mystery of the Korean tree incident.

Catch Me If You Can, Marines

Robert H. Jones also served as a truck driver in Korea. Like many other Soldiers, he was assigned at first to drive trucks. But, expediency outranked assignment in Korea (as it does in most cases involving military operations). Here is Jones’ pre-cease fire story.

I arrived in a training zone just a little south of the MLR in April 1953, where I was assigned to the 31st Regiment of the 7th Infantry Division. I quickly received my first experience under fire.

Around 9 p.m. one night, our area came under bombardment; I had dug a hole next to my cot in the tent to jump into in case of such event. But, I discovered that it was full of GIs already. So, I had to scramble and jump into a cold nearby stream to get below ground level. The concussion from the incoming rounds blew out candles inside the tent. I managed to take one photo of the shells. It was the only photo that I have from the MLR, as we were ordered not to take photos on the front.

Soon, I was assigned as an assistant gunner to a two-man 60-mm mortar crew living in a bunker in the trenches in the “G” Company facing “Old Baldy,” a hotly contested mountain blasted clear of all vegetation. Later on, our 4th of July hot lunch meal was interrupted with a heavy mortar barrage coming in on top of our company troop “chow” line. There were casualties.

Being able to drive a large truck, I was taken from the trench... to be assigned to the company area to drive the 2-1/2-ton ("deuce and a half") "G" Company truck, which allowed me to wear the uniform of a front-line truck driver. I had goggles to wear on my steel helmet when we were ordered to drive with the windshield laid down on the hood of the truck. When we drove with the windshield down, the driver and front seat passenger risked getting their heads cut off by piano wire stretched across to roads. Those helmets sure came in handy.

Our WWII-style detachable steel helmets were very practical to use for a variety of other things other than somewhat protecting the head. For instance, we used them to dig with, wash in, and sit on. We also used them for many other practical things that filled a soldier’s daily needs. Also, we wore “flak-jackets” that were almost useless compared with those that are standard issue for troops today.

As the hot war progressed, I was awarded the Combat Infantry Badge (CIB) and I was assigned to Battalion Headquarters in the motor pool and promoted to Private First Class to drive a 3/4-ton truck and a new style jeep which replaced the outdated WWII jeep. The new jeep had overhead cams and could outrun old jeeps used by the area’s 1st Marine Division Military Police trying to catch new army jeeps going over 25-mph on the road to Seoul.

My runs into Seoul for various reasons—in fact, all my runs—gave me some striking insights into what was going on in the war zone. One common practice I noticed in the rear area compounds in Korea involved GIs handing out candy, food and GI clothing to children. I also hauled water up to the MLR in “water buffaloes” hitched on the back of my “deuce and a half”.

The water provided for the front-line GIs was heavily chlorinated, tan colored, creek water; it was hardly drinkable. Also, on line soldiers hardly got enough food and clothing as softhearted GIs all along the Korean supply line gave away a lot of it to children and civilians. Our ration of washed fatigue uniforms, underwear and socks were usually the most used, almost worn-out. The new items were, more than likely, contributed to civilians for whatever reason. Shower baths were also infrequent for those on front-line duty.

While I have no pictures of it, believe me, when I was driving GI trash to our dumpsites, I viewed many half-starved children crawling over the garbage heaps looking for salvageable articles, and eating on-site scrap food. Eventually the fighting ended and I drew a new assignment.

Aiming Ammo At The Announcers

I am a WWII and Korean War veteran. I was Platoon Sgt. (SFC) with the 1st Leaflet and Loudspeaker Co. We were on the main line of resistance, coinciding with leaflet drops. We broadcast propaganda from scripts and music of nostalgic nature to the enemy in an effort to get them to surrender. Of course, we received heavy mortar and artillery fire in return.

One day, after we made our broadcast, the Chinese attacked us and overran our position. I was in a bunker with two other GIs when we heard screaming and yelling from American and Chinese troops. We thought for sure that the Chinese would find our bunker, but someone must have been watching over us.

We sat tight with our carbines aimed at the flap that covered our bunker. Suddenly the flap flipped open and there stood an American lieutenant with a sub-machine gun. He was as surprised as we were. A truly happy ending.

Building Airstrips

On February 18, 1952, after completing basic training at Camp Roberts, CA and 22 weeks of engineering training at Fort Wachuka, AZ, Bernie was assigned to the 808th Engineer Battalion in Pyongyang, where he served until December 7, 1953. Initially, their responsibility was to upgrade an airfield near Pyongyang, but their stay lasted only a few weeks before heavy enemy attacks forced them to abandon the airstrip and relocate to Inchon, just south of Seoul.

Although it was an Army unit, the 808th Engineer Aviation Battalion had a unique classification, SCARWAF, which stood for Special Category Army Replacements With Air Force. Their task was to construct a landing strip at the Kunsan Air Base that would be able to withstand the rigorous demands of takeoffs and landings by fighters and bombers.

The Kunsan Air Base was the site of an early Japanese airfield, but it was unimproved and limited in landing distance. It had been under enemy control until the 24th Infantry Division retook it from the North Koreans in October 1950.

Originally constructed of sod, its surface had been upgraded to 5,000 feet of asphalt. When the 808th engineers arrived, they faced the challenge of further upgrading the facility to include 6,300 feet of concrete, which later was extended to 9,000 feet. Many obstacles stood in their path, including enemy attacks and temperatures that ranged from 40º below zero in winter to 100º in the summer.

Many men in Bernie’s unit suffered severe frostbite. Heavy enemy fire and bombing attacks were frequent, but fortunately the unit escaped with limited casualties.

Although their normal duties were bridge building, river crossings, obstacle construction, road building and other similar tasks, the 808th Engineer Battalion served a vital role in making the airfield suitable for the 3rd Bomb Wing and its B-26 bombers, which used it from 1951 to 1954. A Marine Aviation squadron arrived in April 1952, followed by the 474th Fighter-Bomber group with its F-84 fighters. Other fighter and bomber wings also used the site.

Following his term of duty involving work on the airfield, Bernie returned to Inchon to assist with the evacuation of the wounded to Japan. On July 27, 1953, the Armistice was signed, and Bernie was released from active duty on December 7, 1953.

For his service Bernie was awarded the Korean War Medal, United Nations Service Medal, National Defense Medal, three Battle Participation Service Stars, the Good Conduct Medal, and the Connecticut Service Medal.

Accidental Discharges

Most military members in the war zone looked forward to receiving their discharges and going home. Unfortunately, some of them were the victims of another type of discharge that were sometimes fatal: those caused by Soldiers’ own weapons.

This excerpt from the August 8, 1953 edition of The Fire Ball, the 40th Inf. Div.’s newspaper, highlighted such accidents:

Horseplay Could Mean Quick Death

“We were just horsing around. He pointed his .45 at me and I pointed my M-1 at him. Then it went off.”

Perhaps you think it just couldn’t happen. Soldiers aren’t that foolish. But it did happen very recently and it cost a sergeant his life.

Of course, he should have known better, but after the rifle fired accidentally it was too late.

Simple “horseplay” may cause physical injuries. When weapons are added it becomes a deadly game.

Don’t play with death.

Those accidental discharges discussed in the above article were exactly what battalion surgeon Barney Dibble wrote about. Unfortunately, they were part of his job. Sadly, as Dibble pointed out in the story below, the accidents were sometimes preventable.

Fast Draw, Quick Death

During my tour as a battalion surgeon with the First Marine Division in Korea I saw three Marines who had been killed by accidental discharge of a weapon. One happened when we were in reserve at Camp Tripoli on the So-Yang River.

We’d been on the front lines for almost three months in the mountains of North Korea. Most everyone was relaxed, living in tents rather than cold smoky bunkers, not having to wear our helmets all day, able to walk around in the company streets without worrying about incoming, eating three meals a day rather than two, and so on.

I was sitting on my cot talking to Bob Kimball, the other battalion surgeon. Suddenly a very loud shot rang out quite close to our tent. Bob said, “Forty-five!” I agreed.

We jumped up and ran toward where we’d heard the sound. So did a few dozen others. There was a big Marine lying on the ground with two other men kneeling beside him. One was a Navy corpsman from George Company who I knew quite well because I’d assigned him to the Forward Aid Station up there and worked with him numerous times when I was on the line triaging WIAs. The other man I didn’t know.

Kimball and I ran up to see what had happened. The Marine had died while being carried to the Aid Station. He’d been playfully practicing “fast draws” with the corpsman whose .45 was supposedly unloaded. It wasn’t.

Another time there was a handsome, blond, second lieutenant in Weapons Company who was cleaning his .45 in his tent back of the lines on a beautiful sunny Easter Sunday morning in April. The azaleas were purpled out all over the hills above Seoul where the rice didn’t grow and forsythia lined the little streams with yellow gold. The chamber of that .45 wasn’t empty either, and the lieutenant lay dead on the pounded mud floor of his tent.

But the most painful memory I have is what I saw on the very first day I reported to H & S Company, Third Battalion, Fifth Marine Regt. I had just arrived with Bob Kimball by jeep from Regimental Headquarters to relieve the two battalion surgeons, Fred Overman and another one whose name I can’t remember.

Fred showed me around the Aid Station and introduced me to the corpsmen working there. We filed back out into the sunshine of a cold, but windless, mid-winter day in the mountains of North Korea.

The corpsmen were relaxing a little, two of them laughing and talking about their own imminent departure from the front lines of the battalion to rear area outfits. One said with a huge grin, “We’re gonna be rear-echelon pogues and proud of it!”

Fred gestured toward the ambulance driver. “Do you know, Gump?”

“Yeah.” He stepped forward and told the story. “He was gonna’ climb down into one of those deep foxholes, you know, the ones with fire steps we use on watch?” Gumpert explained. “He was relieving his buddy to go heat up some chow in their bunker. He handed his M-l down to the guy, butt first. His buddy, his buddy, mind ya’, reached up and grabbed the rifle by the trigger housing—and the damn thing went off.”

The corpsmen put Samuels in the cracker-box ambulance and the driver, who I later learned was Bill Meadows, took off with him. The battalion surgeons and corpsmen left shortly, also, in the jeep that had brought us up, leaving Kimball and me to take over.

The Use Of RADAR To Detect Mortars In The Korean War

For many years I have been trying to find an article or part of the history of the Korean War documenting the use of RADAR
(an acronym for Radio Detection And Ranging) to locate mortars in the Korean War but have not been able to find any. I even contacted the National Archives in College Park, MD. They could not find anything of its use, either. I think that it is time to reveal what we did and how we did it so that it is recorded in the history of the Korean War.

Prior to the use of RADAR to detect mortars it was almost impossible for the infantry to locate mortars at night. During the daylight hours it was not too difficult. In the late summer of 1951 the U.S. Army began training 15 counter mortar RADAR units (CMRDs), each with 15 men, at Fort Sill, OK. Each unit consisted of:

- Commanding Officer
- Section Chief
- Chief Counter Mortar Observer
- RADAR Mechanic (MOS 1775)
- Radio Operator (2)
- RADAR Operator Observer (2)
- Countermortar Observer (4)
- Computer Operator (2)
- Driver (1)

RADAR was developed just before and during World War II. There are many uses for RADAR, Countermortar being one of many. It has been greatly enhanced since then and is widely used today.

The mission of the counter mortar unit was to detect mortar firings, plot their location, and supply firing data to the artillery fire control center.

How The RADAR Worked

The RADAR Set that I was assigned to after I graduated from RADAR Repair and Maintenance school at the Artillery School at Fort Bliss, TX was an SCR 584 used for fire control of anti-aircraft guns (120mm). The SCR 584 was housed in a semi trailer and was part of a fire control system consisting of a trackerhead, which manually tracked the target in azimuth and elevation, feeding the information to a computer until the target got within the range of the RADAR (32,000 ft-6 miles).

When the target got within range of the fine scope (1.1 miles), the data was transmitted to the guns which then became controlled by RADAR, allowing the gun crew to set the fuse on the artillery shell and fire at the target.

Modifications In Korea

I arrived in Korea in January 1952 and was assigned to the 8th Field Artillery Battalion, attached to the 27th Wolfhound Infantry Regiment of the 25th Infantry Division. The 8th Field Artillery was just coming off of the front at Kumwha, part of the Iron Triangle and was going to a new position in the Mungdung Ni Valley near Heartbreak Ridge.

The RADAR Set was an AN/TPQ3(1), which was a converted AN/TPS3. The AN/TPQ3, the set to be used for locating mortars, was the only mortar locator classified as standard by Army Ground Forces.

There were several minor modifications made to the AN/TPS3. The PPI (Plan Position Indicator) scope range was changed to 10-12,000 yards and the sweeping mechanism was converted to produce an off-Center PPI operation. No changes were made to A-scan, since it was not used in mortar location.

The Sweep selsyn in the antenna pedestal was replaced with a small data transmission selsyn, a device by which angular measurement in position in a generator is transmitted to a motor. It consists of a generator and a motor so connected that the motor will assume the same relative position of the generator. The generator and the motor are synchronized.

Innovations And Additions

In addition to these minor changes a completely new piece of equipment called a control unit was developed which contained an accurate range unit and an accurate azimuth indicating drive with a built-in sector scan switch. Each of these units was mounted in a separate chassis which could easily be reached for servicing.

There were two knobs on the RADAR console. One, the Scan knob, was used to Start and Stop the antenna sweep in azimuth; the other, the Range knob, was used to position the Range Dot over the echo of the mortar firing.

After arriving at our new position the first thing that we had to do was to build a bunker for the RADAR and the generator. The generator bunker had to be built a distance away from the RADAR bunker because the RADAR was spark-gap modulated and the generator which produced the spark-gap was very noisy.

While those bunkers were built the antenna had to be set up. The antenna had to be located behind a hill and set up in such a way as to screen out as much of the ground clutter as possible, but still allow the mortar shell to be picked up fairly close to the ground.

Our First Operation

After all of this was completed we checked the operation of the RADAR to ensure that the system was working correctly. Once this was completed, we contacted Headquarters of the 8th FA Battalion and advised them that we were ready to go on line. It was not long after this that we got a call that the 27th Regiment was receiving mortar fire and needed our help. We fired up the RADAR.

As the antenna swept the assigned area, the operator quickly picked up an echo on the scope. Immediately the operator pushed in the knob which stopped the antenna from sweeping, a stop watch was started, and the Range knob was pushed in and turned to position the Range Dot over the mortar echo on the scope. The position of the echo was plotted on a map of the sector.

The Scan knob was pulled out, starting the antenna sweeping once again and the Range knob was pulled out. It wasn’t long before the operator picked up another echo. The stop watch was stopped and the Sweep knob was pushed in to stop the antenna sweep. The Range knob was pushed in and turned to position the Range Dot over the echo, and the position of the echo was plotted on the map.

The position of the first echo and the position of the second echo were connected on the map and through the use of a special slide rule, giving the location of the mortar. The grid coordinates were called in to the fire direction center. It wasn’t long before we heard the first rounds screaming overhead toward the location of the mortar.

The Futility Of Finding Enemy Mortars

It was very difficult to hit the mortar, as most of them were mounted on vehicles. Their crews would fire a couple of rounds and move to another location. Some mortars were in bunkers. Their crews would bring them out, fire, and then take them back inside.

This same sequence of events went on pretty constantly. Despite the difficulties, our team had a very good record of locating enemy mortars and having the artillery knock them out.

We Became A Target

Just a small distance from our position, further up the incline from where we were, there was a half track with quad 50 caliber machine guns which fired every five minutes from dusk to dawn every day. There was also a giant searchlight that was illuminating every night at dusk with its beam positioned to bounce off of the clouds and illuminate the front.

The combination of the half track and searchlight exposed our position and attracted a lot of enemy mortar and artillery fire, which caused our antenna to get hit by shrapnel quite a lot. We had to keep repairing the antenna by using baling wire to hold it together.

We also got to be able to pick up artillery fire as well as mortar fire by using the coordinates of our position as the Down position for the second echo. We were able to send the grid coordinates to the Fire Direction Center, enabling the artillery to silence enemy artillery also.

Busy, Busy, Busy

There were times when there were so many artillery and mortar rounds coming in that our grid coordinates were given to other artillery battalions. On several occasions the Air Force flew napalm bombing missions using our data.

We were busy. There were times when we had so many mortar echoes on the RADAR screen that we had to shut the set down and let it cool off because we could not distinguish actual mortar echoes from the heat blobs.

The men of each team were very devoted to their job and served the military honorably. The counter mortar teams provided a service to the artillery and aided greatly in locating and silencing enemy mortars and artillery.

The members of all of the Counter Mortar RADAR Teams deserve to have their exploits and contributions to the defeat of communism in Korea and in the world recorded in the history of the Korean War.

The Ethiopian Officers Spoke English

I was drafted Jan. 11, 1952 and completed six weeks of Infantry Basic Training at Camp Chaffee, AR, followed by eight weeks of Fire Direction School at Fort Sill, OK. After that, I graduated from Leaders School at Camp Chaffee. Then, I returned to Fort Sill for 22-weeks Officers Candidate School.

After graduating from OCS, I received my first assignment, as Executive Officer in a Basic Training Company at Camp Chaffee. Finally, I received orders for Korea. After a roundabout trip, I arrived in Seoul.

I served in the 32nd Inf. Reg., 7th Inf. Div. arriving in October, 1952 at 48th FABN headquarters. I, a recently graduated 2nd Lt. from the Artillery School at Fort Sill, reported to Col. Kimmett, commander. When I reported, he instructed me to get a good night’s rest here, for in the a.m. I would be on an OP directing artillery fire just west of Triangle Hill.

My fellow 2nd Lt., Robert (Bob) F. Ensslin, was on another hill to my west and a little forward of my position. The spice in the cake was that Bob and I both were assigned a Lieutenant from Haille Salassie’s Imperial Guard’s Battalion. We were instructed to teach them the art and skill of directing our 105 mm howitzers. What an assignment! But, it proved a good working relationship, since each Ethiopian Lieutenant could speak English. We both could view the fighting on Triangle Hill, the enemy coming up the north side, with allied troops coming up the south side, exchanging fire.

My Ethiopian’s name was Lt. Tedessa, whereas Bob’s was named Lt. Negeso. During this time, I was sent on night patrol to probe enemy lines. The night was dark, with no moon. My Jeep driver and radio operator, the eponymously named Pfc. Battle (appropriate name), set up atop a hill while the squad proceeded ahead.

There was plenty of gunfire, including a Burp gun, explosions, etc. We were pinned down and couldn’t see a thing. We just waited until the patrol withdrew to return to our lines. I was later interviewed by the Associated Press regarding my experience. Later, I was transferred to Battalion’s OP nearer to Triangle Hill for a short while to again direct artillery fire. This site brought the brass to
Later, the 7th units moved to positions behind Pork Chop and Old Baldy hills. I drew the black bean to be with a company atop Old Baldy, with my OP slightly in front of the company’s trenches. My bunker was only a short distance from where I directed fire. I got Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners while there. When I was relieved off Old Baldy, I was informed that I was the backup FO for Pork Chop, but I never had to go there.

My third assignment was with the ROK army. As I recall, we were at the central front, although I’m not sure. That was in the dead of winter, with temps at or near minus 40 degrees, with no heat and inadequate clothing. There was snow and ice everywhere. I slept fully clothed in my mountain sleeping bag, complete with boots and all. It was the coldest I’ve ever been. My fear was that the ROK troops might bug out on me, leaving me to fend for myself.

From the OP, Lt. Ensslin and I were sent to Service Battery, 48th FABN. I was named Motor Officer; Bob was designated as Ammo Officer. We both got really worked out during at least one period lasting 36 hours during which we hauled boxes of 105 rounds to the batteries and provided service for the 2-1/2-ton trucks that were constantly on the road to the firing batteries. Back at Service Battery, we had a National Guard 1st Lt. as Battery Commander. He was a good leader. We also had a Warrant Officer with other duties.

In addition to my regular assigned duty, I was given extra assignments, e.g., Class Six Officer in charge of the battalion’s beer, wine and liquor. I was also given the duty of being Battalion PX Officer. I had to go each month to the rear to pick up the Battalion’s allotment of PX items, then break them down five ways for distribution.

Our officers’ tent had ammo box-floors and sheets of plywood along the sides to ward off some of the cold. Our two potbelly stoves glowed red as we had them turned up for extra warmth. Bob and I both were promoted to 1st Lt.

When the Korean Cease Fire announcement came, we heard that it could take place at any time. We were still ready to perform our duties should they be called upon. Thank goodness, July 27, 1953 called a halt to the killing. What a relief!

My final assignment was in 48th Headquarters, where I replaced Major (“Mother”) Page as battalion Liaison Officer. Me, now a 1st Lt., was acting in the place of the rotating stateside Major.

I received more than my required 40 points for rotation back to the states. I, along with others, boarded the USS Walton Walker troop ship for the 13-day sail to San Francisco. It was a pleasant sight to see the Golden Gate Bridge, although the bridge’s spires were shrouded in fog.

When we got back to the states, we were hauled to Camp Stoneman for initial processing, then put on commercial trains for the ride to San Antonio’s Fort Sam Houston. That is where I received my final health and military paperwork and release me from active duty.

I flew home to Waco, TX—my home—to be greeted by my beautiful wife and family. Dwight L. Thomas, 319 Palm Dr. Marlin, TX 76661, dwightfwk@sbcglobal.net

A Difference In Perception: Reporters Vs. Combatants

John J. Bindas was a tail gunner on a 98th Bombardment Wing, 343rd Bomb Squadron B-29 Superfortress (“Superforts”) based at Yakota Air Base in Japan. He flew 28 sorties over Korea between September 13, 1952 and March 27, 1953. (His first sortie was on October 1, 1952; his last was February 28, 1953.)

Bindas was a member of Combat Crew 3-F, which included Aircraft Commander John V. Kelly; Pilot Warren B. Hampton; Radar Operator Kenneth G. Johnson; Navigator Robert E. Spencer; Bombardier Gene F. White; Ground Crew Frank Baker & Jim Burdel (or Les Long); Engineer James W. Ward; Radio Operator Myron M. Goffin; Right Gunner Michael E. Burns; Left Gunner Leo J. Bonenfant; Tail Gunner John J. Bindas; and Central Fire Control Gunner Allen J. Smith.

Bindas kept detailed notes about 19 of his 28 combat missions, comparing the results to articles in the Pacific Stars & Stripes. Here are a few of his comments, juxtaposed with headlines and snippets from the newspaper. If nothing else, they show that the war looked a lot different to newspaper reporters than they did to the combatants carrying out their missions.

S&S “Night-Flying B-28s Blast Red Troops.” — “All bombers were from the Japan-based 98th Bomb Wing. Moderate flak over Hoechang was the only opposition encountered.”

Bindas: “4th Mission Target Hoechang, Oct. 15. We made two runs over target on Shoran. The Shoran’ set was being jammed. We had flak that scared hell out of me. The results were very good.”

Oct. 18, 1952

S&S “F-84s Blast Red Naval Station: Sabres Down 2 MIGs: B-29s, B-26s Hack Ground Units” – “Thirteen of the B-29s, all from the 98th Bomb Wing, hit their three targets during darkness, dropping 100-pound high explosive bombs by electronic aiming methods through broken clouds. Three Superforts struck enemy battle line positions. Results were unobserved and light flak, non-firing fighter passes, and searchlights were encountered by the bombers.”

Bindas: “5th Mission Target Sunchon Oct 18. We got to turning Point #1 and we had to feather #2 engine. Then we started to lose altitude and air speed. Aborted primary target and went back to the front line to let go of the load. I counted 22 secondary explosions and several fires.”

Nov. 13, 1952

S&S “B-29s Batter Enemy Bridge, Mine Area; Red Front Plastered” – “The 98th Bomb Wing Superforts dropped 500-pound high explosive bombs by electronic aiming methods on a rail bridge at Pyongyang, a storage area within the Sangam coal mine area north of Kunuri, and Communist frontline fortifications.

“Results were unobserved and opposition ranged from meager to intense flak. One enemy night fighter made non-firing passes on the Allied bombers.”

Bindas: Nov. 12, 9th mission Target Pyongyang Bridge was aiming point. Wing gave wrong calculation. We fouled up on air speed and ended up being the only ones to hit the bridge. We had quite a bit of flak (28 non-radar and 76 radar guns got non-firing attacks from fighters. Results were very good. We got three bottles of Grand-Dad from Wing C.O. They referred to this as “Kelly’s Bridge.”

Dec. 4, 1952

S&S “Four F-86s, Four Red Jest Clash: Sabre Pilots Down Two MIGs” – “Flying through darkness early this morning, 15 FEAF Bomber Command Superforts split into elements to pound a Red headquarters area at Sunchon, a barracks and supply area at Taeyudong, and enemy frontline fortifications.”

Bindas: “13th Mission Target Taeyundong Dec. 3 It was as cold as a witch’s tit. On this one, there was no flak or searchlights, but there were quite a few fighters on our course and my windows were still frozen up. That’s where I lost a few rounds. Results were good. Everyone hit the target for a change.”

Dec. 10, 1952

S&S “MIG-15 Bagged, Vehicles, Front Arms Depot Hit” – “Highlighting last night’s action, 11 B-29s from the 98th Bomb Wing blasted a 15-acre industrial area at Yongpond-dong with 110 tons of explosives. The area, never previously hit by the Superforts, had been used as an ordnance and ammunition depot. The medium bombers met light to moderate flak, searchlights, and were fired on by one fighter plane.”

Bindas: 15th mission Dec 9 Target Yongpond-dong. This was the mission of missions. There was flak, searchlights (32) and fighters. Searchlights locked on ship behind us while enemy fighters were making passes on us. When the ship was in searchlights, they made a pursuit curve and a firing pass. It wasn’t effective. Scared the hell out of us, but everyone came back ok. Target was ammo depot. Results were very good.”

Dec 31, 1952

S&S “AF Braves Heavy Flak To Hit Plant” – “Twenty-one Superforts thundered through formidable fighter and flak opposition deep in North Korea last night to smear a Communist ore processing plant and supply center with 200 tons of bombs.

Another force of Superforts from the Japan-based 98th Bomb Wing lashed out at the Wolly-won-ni supply area eight miles northwest of Sinanju. They, too, had to fight their way through fighter planes, flak and searchlights to hit the 85-acre center, which contained 50 one-story buildings, four barrack-type buildings, and one large administration building.”

Bindas: “18th Mission Dec. 30 Target Wolly-won-ni This was a bad one. The 19th went in before us and got attacked by 12 flights of fighters. Before the IP several of their ships got it. We got 10 ships over that target in 4 min. 5 sec and a post- 398 mph. We had flak, coordinated searchlights and fighters. We got locked on three times.

Ground crew found flak in one engine. No damage. Results were good, CE 32D. The best in the Wing. Smitty had an accident on post flight. He got powder burns when clearing gun with cover open. He charged round out, trigger bar slipped down and depressed sear, which fired round. We got the Oak Leaf Cluster to the Air Medal.”

Jan 6, 1953

S&S “Bombs Rake Troop Supply Spots” – “Both B-29 raids last night were staged by the 98th Bomb Wing. The Superforts pounded the Maenju-fi military area and a troop-supply area near Kunu-ri.”

Bindas: 19th Mission Jan. 6 Target Maenjuri It was only 10 miles north of last mission, but more flak, fighters, and searchlights to go over. We were in luck and had an overcast over the target. We had to drop 20 bombs before we hit the I.P. to be able to climb. Tail compartment wouldn’t pressurize. I really froze. It was 56 degrees below zero. I got frostbite on frozen hands and feet before I could get out of tail compartment. Radar raised hell with Kelly about this.”

Eventually, Bindas was reassigned a KC-97 Air Refueling Tanker as a Boom Operator. The duty may have been easier than serving as a tail gunner on a B-29—but he was still looking out the back end of a plane.

E veryone knew the fighting would be ending at 10 p.m. on the night of July 27, 1953. Common sense dictated that warfighters on both sides would put down their weapons well before then. After all, nobody wanted to earn the dubious distinction of being the last man killed or wounded. But, as the French philosopher François-Marie Arouet, better known as Voltaire, said, “Common sense is not so common.”

Rather than abating in the days leading up to the signing of the armistice, the fighting intensified. One reason was the fact that the two sides had been negotiation for so long that the troops could not take seriously the rumors that they had at long last reached a settlement. Another was that both sides wanted to gain as much territory as they could before the truce actually went into effect.

Both sides struggled right up to the last moment to gain land, albeit an inch or two here and there—and get rid of their extra ammunition. According to the terms of the armistice, which was signed at 10 a.m., the spot the troops were occupying at ten p.m. that night would determine the post-signing boundaries. So, the struggle for an inch or two of territory continued to the last minute. And, what better way to dispose of excess munitions than by dumping them on your enemy?

The Chinese were particularly aggressive in last-minute land grab attempts. But, the allied forces were determined to stop them. Cliff Booth, who was at K-18 when the armistice was agreed to, recalled that the enemy viewed the agreement as an opportunity to advance. He noted that Marine Attack Squadrons, e.g., VMFA 312, (“Checkerboard Squadron”), and VMFA 323 (“Death Rattlers”), flying F4U Corsairs—or anything that would fly—struck back ferociously at the encroaching enemy troops.

Norm Spring, a member of the 31st Infantry Regiment of the 7th Division (the “Bayonet Division”) who had been on the front lines since January 1, 1953, knew well before 10 p.m. that the final day of the fighting was going to be anything but quiet. As he recalled, he spent the final half-day of the war huddled on the back side of a hill Korea waiting “an agonizing 12 hours for the truce to go into effect so the shelling would stop.” His company commander, a WWII veteran, knew it probably would not stop until the last minute.

“Our commander came and warned us that the next 12 hours would probably be dangerous since the North Koreans might throw their remaining ammunition at us before the truce went into effect,” Spring said. “He told us this had happened in the last hours of World War II.” True to his prediction, the same thing happened in Korea.

“We were repairing trenches in an area adjacent to Old Baldy and Pork Chop Hill in the Iron Triangle area, Spring reported. “Our division moved back to a blocking position approximately a quarter of a mile from the front line trenches. We sat on the back side of a steep hill.” That was hardly a safe place to be, especially for Soldiers who wanted to stay alive and well for the next twelve hours.

The shelling continued throughout the day. A Soldier sitting next to Spring took some shrapnel in his leg from a cannon shell. Yet, as Spring recalled, no one in his company fired back. They just sat and did what Soldiers do best: they waited.

Ten p.m. arrived—and it was as if someone threw a “Stop the Shelling” switch. “The firing stopped as if someone had turned off a water tap,”... to drive down to clearly identify where the two regiments actually met on the ground. This resulted in our driving down a road in a valley to pinpoint where this spot was. This was clearly under enemy direct fire...a real experience for both of us. And I found out just how agile a jeep can be.

The most vivid memory which I have of the time leading up to the date and time that the cease fire was actually effective was how much ammo of all calibers and sizes was fired by both sides in those last twelve hours of hostilities. No matter where I was, where I went, and what I did, the noise was continuing and deafening. I later became aware of the fact that some of the people with whom I served in Korea were either wounded or killed, needlessly, during this time.

When I finally rotated home in November 1953, I boarded one of the Navy’s Liberty Ships at Inchon harbor. The voyage took thirty-five days through the Panama Canal, with stops in Hawaii and Colombia (to drop off troops), to New York.

And so it comes to pass, as the fourth hour before dawn approacheth into the land known as Chosen, a messenger goeth forth into the bunkroom of the “Birdmen” and he speaketh unto each, saying, verily, “Arise and don thy flight suits and go to the gathering place, for the master has decreed that it shall be thus.”

The “Birdmen,” awakening, revile the messenger, saying that his mother was not moral and that his father knoweth him not, and they rise and seek out their socks and go forth to break bread; and one breaketh his hand on the bread.

They find not their targets. And great are their trepidations. They call out to one another, saying, “‘Warcry One,’ come thou unto me...”

Then they are gathered together in the sanctum known by the name of briefing, and their voices are hushed, for they are in the presence of their master. And it comes to pass that disciples arise and speak unto them, telling of routes, altitudes and targets, for this is the manner of their speaking.

And at last the master himself ariseth in the sanctum and sayeth unto them, “Yea, verily, ye are fortunate indeed, for your enemy is sorry put and does naught to oppose you. Go ye forth and gird ye for battle.”

And the “Birdmen” whisper to one another, “Yea, this will indeed be a day of tribulation, for the master retireth to his sack and goeth not among us.”

Then the “Birdmen” seek out their iron birds and prepare for the rituals and some among them are beset with trembling and with redness of the eyes, for they partook too freely of the evening wine. These seek out their friends and speak privily to them, saying, “Many times have I succored and been a brother unto thee. Whilst thou not therefore take my place in battle this day, for I am overtaken by an illness?”

But their friends answer, saying, “Thou soundest faint and I hear thee not.”

Museum Update:
Engaging Partners in the Community

August 15, 2013

To the Korean War Veterans Association:

As we continue the great momentum with the Museum campaign, I wanted to take this opportunity to update you on the Museum’s ongoing participation in community initiatives as well as the significant progress we have had with the online Virtual Museum.

By partnering in events and programs, we continue to broaden and strengthen our ties within the military and business community in New York City. Earlier this summer, the Museum had the wonderful opportunity to participate in Army Week NYC alongside other prominent Veteran organizations including Operation Homefront, Hope For The Warriors® and Purple Heart Homes. Throughout the week, special events honored the U.S. Army’s 238th birthday while recognizing the contributions of U.S. Army veterans, individuals and organizations who continue to serve.

As part of our ongoing commitment to community engagement, we continue to expand the Museum’s Speakers Series by building upon the success of the three that commenced last year. Featuring special presentations by Korean War Veterans, these lectures coincided with the launch of our activities commemorating the 60th anniversary of the Armistice. Additional events will be scheduled as we also are engaged in discussions with several organizations in New York City. These initiatives are incredible opportunities for the Museum to provide community awareness and educational activities in advance of the debut of the physical site. Partnerships forged before the opening will be an excellent basis for a wide range of activities and events in the future.

Finally, as we narrow the quest for our permanent home in New York City, we continue to upgrade and expand our Virtual Museum through our website. We hope that this two-track, parallel approach will ensure that Korean War Veterans and their families have a place where their deeds and sacrifices can continue to be remembered. A key part of this effort is the ongoing enhancement of the Wall of Honor, media components that allows the inclusion of pictures, videos, medals, ribbons and more. New features make it easier to use.

If you have not already visited the Virtual Wall of Honor and submitted your story, I invite you to do so. Our efforts are to provide the brave soldiers of the Korean War with a place where their stories can be shared, honored and forever remembered. Please help us keep your memories alive.

As always, thank you all for your outstanding service and for teaching us that freedom is not free: it is always worth protecting.

Sincerely,

Tony Enrietto

Paul Wolfgeher and Bob Jones made their annual 1st Quarter of the school year trip to Lawson [MO] High School. This year Mr. Boswell had three history classes, so they had to be there for the second-hour class. After that, they ate lunch with the school teachers and finished the day with the third- and fourth-hour classes.

It was a long day for both veterans, but as usual they enjoyed the experience.

They are already looking forward to next year’s session.

NOTE: Here is a brief account of the train accident GySgt Persing mentioned:

109th FA Battalion Train Wreck: Thirty-three members of two batteries of 109th Field Artillery Battalion were killed and about two score others were seriously injured early on the morning of September 11, 1950, when the rear of their troop train was rammed by a crack Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train near West Lafayette, O. In addition, many soldiers of 109th Infantry from Lackawanna and Wayne Counties and other 109th Artillery men suffered injuries in the crash, a total of 278, the ICC reported.

On May 16, 2013, three members spoke to two separate groups of seniors at Toms River High School South, Ocean County, NJ, with the help of history teacher Jeff Schenker.

Students heard from Nick Troici and his experience as an Army Medic in Korea, the many wounded Soldiers to whom he attended, and the men he lost in his outfit.

Roy Hendra, an Army Corps engineer, spoke about the extreme cold weather and how brutal the North Korean and Chinese soldiers were. As he explained, many young Chinese soldiers did not have proper winter shoes or gear.

Norm Persing, a Marine Corps Gunnery Sergeant, told students he joined the Marines after 33 Soldiers from his small town in Wilkes-Barre, PA were killed in a train wreck. They were headed to California to be shipped off to Korea. Thirty-three men he knew died without firing a shot.

Members Visit Fort Edward New York High School

On May 30, 2013, seven members visited Fort Edward [NY] High School, where they were warmly welcomed by Mr. Peter Prindle of the History Department and other staff members. Introduced by Robert Garland, chairman of the chapter’s program, the veterans stood and saluted the students, then spoke to them in turn about the war in Korea and their personal experiences while serving there.

Each of the veterans, many of whom wore Combat Infantry Badges, had interesting stories to tell. Paul Garcia emphasized the extremely high casualties borne by the forces of the United States particularly, but also by the many other countries involved under the United Nations. Ed Bushey, a recipient of the Bronze Star for Valor, was applauded by the audience when he stood.

The audience of about 30 students was very respectful and attentive, and graciously applauded each veteran when he spoke. The students examined with great interest artifacts which the veterans brought. They engaged many of the veterans in conversation when the program concluded.

The school staff was particularly cooperative. Mr. Prindle went out of his way in extending utmost courtesy to the members and helped in the planning with Mr. Garland. This visit was a very positive experience for all concerned.

We awarded our annual $1,000 college scholarship to Anthony Wayne High School graduating senior Spencer King. To be eligible in our Tell America program, applicants are required to participate in the Korean War research project and complete a 250-word essay explaining their lasting impression of the veteran, the Korean War’s role in American history, and its impact on global democracy.

Mr. King’s essay:

As many people today know, North Korea is a very hostile and controversial country. Since it is under a communist government there are very few, if any, freedoms and they strongly resist the United Nations. This resentment and harsh attitude can be traced back to the 1950’s and the Korean War, which many people see as a failure. Although overall North Korea remained a communist threat, the Korean War was ultimately a success due to moral and political views obtained in Korea. Before the Korean War the UN used very little jurisdiction or power rendering it almost useless, but after Korea things changed. The act of the UN joining the side of South Korean showed that they were not just going to let communism and its oppression take over the world; the UN decided to stand up for its beliefs. This gave other countries the hope that they were not alone in the struggle for freedom. Even during the war the UN Forces greatly enhanced their fighting skills giving them more military power in the future. By the end of the conflict the UN and North Korea were at a bloody stalemate, but out of the stalemate came a free and democratic South Korea. North Korea may have remained communist but the UN protected its ally and ultimately achieved its goal. The United Nations came out of the Korean War with more power and a better foundation therefore it can be considered a successful military venture.

We have been to these schools in previous years and the program has been well received and they have asked us to return next year. The students are really interested in learning about the Korean War. Carl L. Canon, 4512 Conestoga Trl., Copley, OH 44321

On March 26, 2013, three members presented a program on the Korean War to three history classes as Omaha’s Westside High School. About 250 students were in the auditorium.

Our three presenters were Dale Griffiths, who served with KMAG, chapter president Bill Christensen, who served with the 25th Inf. Div PIO as a combat correspondent, and Dennis Pavlik, a former POW who served with the Triple Nickel FA Bn (555).

The commentator was Nate Brimely, a Vietnam vet who is a history teacher at Westside High.

On April 18, 2013, Bob Brockish and I participated in the annual “Oral History Day” at Thornton High School, Thornton, CO. On this day Thornton High School invites veterans to come in and share with the students their experiences of being in the military service. Their accounts provide a great opportunity to “Tell America” about Korea, especially with the current events in Korea.

Bob and I have prepared “Power Point” presentations separately and we covered five sessions. The sessions were back to back in selected classrooms for fifty minutes each.

Our presentations are similar. They began with the geographical location of Korea and some early history of the people and culture. That was followed by the roots of the war, beginning with events in the early 20th Century, especially in the aftermath of WWII. That flowed naturally into the creation of the two governments on the Korean Peninsula and the war.

The presentation concluded with the human cost of the war and the contrasts of South Korea then and now.

This “Oral History Day” has been a very successful school event for sixteen years, and has been highly regarded by the participating students.

Members participated in two “Living History” days at schools in Louuden County, VA in April. The first was at Harper Park Middle School on April 9th; the second was on April 17th, at Mercer Middle School.

The format for the day was the same in both schools. Veterans from several wars were invited and there was a good crowd at both events. Each veteran was assigned a student guide who led him to the classroom where he would be seated at a table along with another veteran from another war. Each of us would tell our story and open the session for questions.

The students were very perceptive in their inquiries, which made for a lively discussion. The program lasted the whole school day, with an exchange of students every 25 minutes. At noon a delicious meal was served and pictures were taken with our guide for the school web page. Local businesses support the program with contributions of various kinds.

This is the second year we have participated in this “Living History Day.” We always make a hit with our blue jackets. Several of us bring small picture albums and pass them around in the sessions to help encourage questions about our service.

Several members attended a Memorial Day commemoration for “fallen heroes” from Georgia, while some attended the Memorial Day dedication of the Veterans Park at the Atlanta History Center. Some 500 people gathered at the History Center to remember those who died and those who survived.

This new park honors all U.S. military veterans from all conflicts, whether they saw armed conflict or not. The site has pedestals with oral histories they have been collecting over ten years. Here is a sample, provided by chapter member Robert A. Moore, 45th Infantry Division, U.S. Army, Korean War:

“I never did like cold even though I was from New York. I didn’t know what cold was until I got to Korea...Half the time we didn’t know what hill we were on or what we were doing. We’d find out later...I can remember saying to myself when I was up in the hills...if the Good Lord gets me out of here, I can make it from here. Many times I think back about how tough that was. As an American, it made a big difference in my life. I don’t like war. I don’t think anyone likes war, but I think we have to protect our country, respect our flag. That’s very important to me.”

Our chaplain, Ralph De La Vega, read a Korean War poem that is etched in stone at a Korean War Veterans Memorial in Liberty State Park, NJ, off Exit 14-B near Jersey City, NJ.

Chapter Commander John Ramieri wrote a letter titled, “No vet should ever be forgotten” that appeared in the June 27, 2013 Santa Barbara News-Press. Here is the letter:

This is the first year that I can remember Korean War veterans being honored in the manner they rightly deserved. The Korean War was known as the forgotten war, until today. It is an honor to be part of a great group of men and women. The Memorial Day homages at the Santa Barbara Cemetery and at the Veterans Memorial Building were mind-boggling. Working together, we can make sure the Iraq and Afghanistan veterans, and veterans of the future, are never forgotten.
We want to thank all those involved: Marge Beavers, Bev Ochoa, and the management team of the Veterans Memorial Building, and also the Pierre Claeyssens Veterans Memorial Museum, directed and managed by John Blankenship.

A special thanks to Lt. Col. Peter Paredes, Army Commander, VFW; Chief Bob Handy, Navy; Sgt. Ralph De la Vega, Marine Corps; Sgt. John Suzuki, Army Commander, American Legion; Capt. John Blankenship, Navy; and Lt. Col. Jack Harris, Marine Corps, retired. Through negotiating and compromise by all parties, they brought everybody and everything together to make it happen.

We were privileged to be a part of the National Memorial Day Concert on the Capitol Lawn on May 26, 2013. The concert was aired nationwide over PBS stations on both Sunday night and Monday.

Part of the program featured a salute to the veterans of the Korean War. Eight of our members stood at attention on the platform and received a standing ovation from the huge audience in front of the nation’s Capitol.

Short films of the action in Korea were shown on the large screens, and the Korean Memorial was shown with many visiting veterans in poignant scenes of remembrance. It was an honor to represent our fellow Korean War veterans scattered through all 50 states.

Capitol Concerts, which produces the program each year, was very gracious in providing transportation for our members to and from the program.

At our May 13 regular meeting, our guest speaker, Eun-chul Lee, Consul General of Boston of the Republic Of Korea (ROK), spoke about the very special relationship between his country and the United States. Consul General Lee said his countrymen will always be so thankful for the sacrifices of so many Americans and UN armed forces that have given the ROK freedom it has not seen for many generations.

After our meeting, several members took Consul Lee to our Maine Korean War Memorial at Mount Hope Cemetery in Bangor.

We were delighted to be joined this year by student volunteers from the church’s vacation bible school. They told the veterans that they do not get very much information at school about the war and were grateful to hear about the sacrifices made by the Korean War veterans for freedom.

A Korean lady and Associate member, Mrs. Byoung Baek, has been an integral part of any success our chapter has had, providing support for us from her many Korean friends.

She attends all events we plan. The high point was when she persuaded a Korean LPGA golfer, Jeong (“JJ”) Jang (Rochester Champion in 2006), and her father/manager to visit our Korean War Veterans Memorial right after she had won. And, they brought all the Korean press corps with them. Each year since then, when “JJ” plays in the Rochester LPGA tournament, she and her family visit our Memorial and make significant donations for upkeep!

At a recent Ch 58 meeting, Mrs. Byoung Baek displays pictures and memorabilia of the Rose Bowl Parade float on which she worked.

Last fall, Mrs. Baek heard that the lead float to be in the New Year’s Day parade was to honor our KWVA. She determined to be part of the group that added the decorations. After contacting officials in Pasadena, she learned there was a group of Koreans who had already signed up to work on “OUR” 60th Anniversary float. Mrs. Baek flew to California on her own and worked on all segments of covering the float with flowers, plants, and seeds as her personal contribution to make the 60th Anniversary a huge success!

In keeping with the United Nations aspect of the Korean War, our chapter is twinned with the South London Branch of the British Korean Veterans Association and the Melbourne Australian Association. Every year for the past five years the Chapter Standard has been paraded with the British Standards at the Easter Sunday Parade in the Tower of London. On the last four occasions the Standard has been laid on the altar of The Chapel Royal of St Peter at Vincula HM Tower of London during the Easter Sunday service.

Every year our January meeting is designated the “International Meeting.” We march in to the playing of the respective national anthems, and the national standards of each country are represented by chapter members. We have Australian, Canadian, Korean, British and American members.

Chapter Receives Outstanding Veterans Service Organization Award

On April 7, 2013, we received the 2013 Outstanding Veterans Service Organization Award by the United Veterans Committee of Colorado in recognition of and appreciation for our continued dedication and service to Colorado communities, especially their public schools.

The committee’s “Proud to be An American” Awards program has provided distinction to many schools’ patriotic performance, creating an environment in which students learn the meaning of service and the requirement to excel scholastically. This effort to promote our American heritage instills patriotism in our youth, thus building a better nation.

This unique program benefits and serves as an inspiration to all Coloradans.

We participated in the annual Greeley 4th of July Stampede Days parade. Viewers gave our contingent standing ovations along the entire parade route.

We were featured in a July 15, 2012 article in the Lexington Herald-Leader titled, “South Korea presents medals to Central Ky. War veterans.” In it, reporter Jim Warren described a ceremony at which representatives of the South Korean government presented “Ambassador for Peace Medals” to about thirty Central Kentucky Korean War veterans.

John Suh of Louisville, KY, a Korea native and regional director with the Korean National Advisory Council on Reunification, presented the medals during a luncheon at the Hannanoki Restaurant in Lexington, which is often the venue for chapter get-togethers.

“Mr. Suh, with the Korean Advisory Council on Unification, went around to where each veteran was sitting and placed a medal around his neck,” Harry Walsh, a Korean War veteran from Lexington (and a native of Ansonia, Connecticut) said. “We were overcome with Mr. Suh’s caring attitude and respect for all the veterans.”

Walsh added that Lexington’s mayor, Jim Gray, was in attendance and thanked each veteran personally for their service to our country. He emphasized that the medal recipients were grateful for the recognition.

According to Warren, Suh said, “The South Korean government seeks to honor as many veterans as possible now because opportunities to do so are becoming scarce.” The average age for Korean War veterans is now about 82.

Regarding the presentation, Walsh concluded, “It means a lot. They are very nice people to do all this, and they just can’t seem to do enough for us. We really appreciate it.”

Crary told us that old stores are being torn down and new businesses, restaurants, and an open air bandstand for “Friday Night Live” will be erected in their places. (Photos submitted by Bob Simon).

Korean War Veterans Dedicate Their New Memorial

On June 1, 2013 we dedicated our new Korean War Veterans Memorial in Conestee Park, 840 Mauldin Road, Greenville, SC. Approximately 400 veterans and local residents attended the dedication.

The Memorial consists of polished and engraved Georgia Granite, appropriate flags, and an Honors Walkway of engraved honor and memory bricks. All the funds for the Memorial were raised by members over about 30 months, using mail, e-mail, local fund raisers, and the sale of memorial bricks. No government money was used for the Memorial.

Donations and the sale of bricks were also made with credit card by Pay-Pal via their website, www.koreanvets301.com. The memorial committee included Chairman Lew Perry, Dean Howell, Jerry Lundsford, and Bob Bostwick.

DEPARTMENT OF NEW YORK

The department held its annual spring convention in Saratoga Springs, NY from April 30 to May 3, 2013. Dr. Hubert Lee sang a poem “Our Dear Heroes” at a dinner to honor all Korean War veterans for their ultimate sacrifice for freedom and peace for South Korean people during the Korean War.

He reminded veterans of the poem “The Meeting,” by Henry Longfellow (see below). Ironically, the convention was held at the Longfellow Inn, which is named after the poet and is a reflection of his spirit.

Hubert Hojae Lee, 1st VP, Ch 202
Orange County, NY

The Meeting

After so long an absence
At last we meet again:
Does the meeting give us pleasure,
Or does it give us pain?

The tree of life has been shaken,
And but few of us linger now,
Like the prophets two or three berries
In the top of the uppermost bough.

We cordially greet each other
In the old, familiar tone;
And we think, though we do not say it,
How old and gray he is grown!

We speak of a Merry Christmas
And many a Happy New Year;
But each in his heart is thinking
Of those that are not here.

We speak of friends and their fortunes,
And of what they did and said,
Till the dead alone seem living,
And the living alone seem dead.

And at last we hardly distinguish
Between the ghosts and the guests;
And a mist and shadow of sadness
Steals over our merriest jests.

JPAC Under Fire

An article in the August 2, 2013 Stars & Stripes titled “Lawmakers grill POW/MIA officials on inefficiencies” suggested that JPAC’s future might be in trouble.

The article begins with these two paragraphs:

“WASHINGTON — Leaders of the military’s POW/MIA recovery operations dismissed reports of rampant inefficiency and infighting in a Capitol Hill appearance Thursday, insisting that mostly minor changes will address public concerns about their work.

But furious lawmakers called that approach a disservice to fallen troops and their families, demanding larger changes and more proof that money being spent on the recovery efforts isn’t being wasted.”

The writer continues:

“A Government Accountability Office last month blasted the two agencies for similar problems, noting that the military’s search for troops who died overseas lacks clear leadership and focus, which has hampered improvement of recovery operations.”

What impact would the discontinuance of JPAC have on the search for missing Korean War veterans? That is something the KWVA has to start considering.

Lester Hammond...is not a member of the KWVA—or any other military organization. Unfortunately, he was killed in action on August 14, 1952. For his actions that day he earned the Medal of Honor. (See the citation below.) He certainly deserves mention in these pages.

The Quincy [IL] Herald-Whig included a lengthy article about Hammond in its March 27, 2013 edition. As Staff Writer Steve Eighinger wrote:

The late Lester Hammond Jr. is a forgotten hero of the conflict that history has labeled the Forgotten War.

Hammond, an Army corporal who would have been 82 years old this month, is the area’s only Medal of Honor winner. He sacrificed his own life in the midst of the Korean War to save the remaining members of his patrol who were being overrun by hundreds of Chinese communists on a barren, faraway hill in North Korea in August 1952.

Hammond’s decision was the ultimate act of bravery. Already wounded twice and separated from the rest of his men, Hammond called in artillery support to protect the rest of the patrol — knowing that such a response would take his own life. Hammond was 21 when he perished.

The article is available on-line at http://www.whig.com/story/21661556/a-forgotten-hero-from-the-forgotten-war-quincys-medal-of-honor-of-winner-would-have-turned-82-this-month

Citation:

Cpl. Hammond, a radio operator with Company A, distinguished himself by conspicuous gallantry and outstanding courage above and beyond the call of duty in action against the enemy. Cpl. Hammond was a member of a 6 man reconnaissance patrol which had penetrated approximately 3,500 yards into enemy-held territory. Ambushed and partially surrounded by a large hostile force, the small group opened fire, then quickly withdrew up a narrow ravine in search of protective cover. Despite a wound sustained in the initial exchange of fire and imminent danger of being overrun by the numerically superior foe, he refused to seek shelter and, remaining in an exposed place, called for artillery fire to support a defensive action. Constantly vulnerable to enemy observation and action, he coordinated and directed crippling fire on the assailants, inflicting heavy casualties and repulsing several attempts to overrun friendly positions. Although wounded a second time, he remained steadfast and maintained his stand until mortally wounded. His indomitable fighting spirit set an inspiring example of valor to his comrades and, through his actions, the onslaught was stemmed, enabling a friendly platoon to reach the beleaguered patrol, evacuate the wounded, and effect a safe withdrawal to friendly lines. Cpl. Hammond’s unfailing courage and consummate devotion to duty reflect lasting glory on himself and uphold the finest traditions of the military service.

The award reads “In appreciation for outstanding service on behalf of the Polish Legion of American Veterans, USA.”

Sinnicki was the leader in establishing a scholarship fund for the organization. He informed the members about how the program would be funded, then requested and received $200,000 from the New York State Commander for the PLAV, USA, which came from the sale of one its posts, located in Brooklyn, NY, for over $3 million.

The Attorney General of New York released the $200,000 to the PLAV, USA on 12 December 2012 and a scholarship fund was established. Since then, the scholarship funds have received another $100,000 from the will of a deceased veteran of the organization.

This Veterans Heritage Project started in 2003 when U.S. Congressional Representatives nominated it for inclusion in the Library of Congress Bicentennial ‘Local Legacies.’ High school students interview veterans and document their military history for preservation in the Library of Congress. Annually a book is published with these stories. This event resulted in publication of Book #9.

My brother Tom and I sat next to each other in a line of seventeen Korean War veterans who signed the new book for attendees. I wore the Arizona Veterans Hall of Fame cover and medalion and Tom wore his chapter cover and shirt.

The nearby photograph was taken by Susan Kee, a great friend to us Korean War veterans, whose letter appears below. Just for the record, I am in the Arden A. Rowley Chapter, for which I served as Commander for six years. Tom is Vice Commander of the West Valley Chapter.

Ms. Kee’s letter:
Mr. Lew Bradley and Mr. Tom Bradley,

It was so exciting to see you and your brother being honored at the VHP reception! I am so thankful and honored to know you both. What an honor it is for me to know 2 brothers who served in the Korean War. Your service reminds me over and over of the many American families who sent their young boys to war for the sake of Korea. How much more amazing that your family sent 2 young sons to war. I am so humbled by the love of Americans for freedom and the willingness to fight for it.

For me, there are not enough places for Korean War veterans’ stories to be told. I am so glad that both of you decided to have your stories told with VHP. Both of your stories will inspire many generations of Americans with your love of our country and commitment to serving it.

Mr. Tom Bradley, how special that your grandson is the one who interviewed you for the story!

Thank you both for your service in the Korean War, without which I would not be here today. I hope you know the unending depth of my gratitude and of all Koreans.

Thank you and God bless you!

Sincerely,
Susan Kee

How Little The Infantryman Knows About The War

I CLAIM TO BE A WORLD-CLASS EXPERT in a subfield of Korean War history. Specifically, it is the entire body of knowledge relating to: (1) what was happening within six feet of my foxhole, while I was awake; (2) my position in a column of moving men, while there was enough light to see, and, maybe, (3) a few other micro situations. That means that during the battle for Hill 749, I was unaware of, at least, 99.9 percent of what was happening elsewhere in the battlefield area. (William Edward Alli)

Boyx Spy in Korean War Presents Peace Medallions

By Tom J. Thiel

One by one, Eddie Ko placed the medals around the necks of Korean War veterans.

Korean-born Ko first recounted helping Americans as a 14-year-old spy after his parents were killed by North Korean soldiers. He then presented the Ambassador for Peace medallions, given as “thank-yous” by the South Korean government.

“They are my brothers,” said Ko, a Tampa resident, and liaison between the Department of Florida KWVA and the Korean government. “The Korean government and Korean people really appreciate what these veterans did,” he noted.

About sixty veterans came to the ceremony. About half of them had already received their medals at earlier ceremonies. Mr. He Beom Kim, Consulate General of the Republic of Korea in Atlanta, provided this batch of medallions. We are most grateful to Consulate General Mr. Kim for his special effort to ensure that all our members were properly honored.

As the 78-year-old Ko spoke, one man stroked his wife’s back as tears formed in his eyes. Others vigorously nodded their heads when Ko lauded the perseverance of the American soldiers he met during his time as a spy.

“You are the great American soldiers,” he said. “Because of you, Korea has peace. Because of you, Korea is strong.”

After receiving his medallion, Gordon Talfoten used to say, to the rest of the story.

Eddie Ko’s world changed dramatically in June 1950, when the North Korean Army invaded South Korea and killed his Christian missionary parents and thousands of other innocent civilians. He became a 14-year-old orphan left to survive on his own.

Bitter over the senseless murder of his parents, Ko joined the Korean Student Volunteer Army, an anti-communist group of “boy spies,” headed by a South Korean officer. They all had very close ties to Lt. Eugene F. Clark, sent by the U.S. military to gather intelligence information in preparation for the Inchon Landing.

“I would tell them (the North Koreans) I was orphans and hungry; this would always catch them off guard,” Ko said Wednesday, recalling his interactions with the enemy in trying to learn the number of troops North Korea had on the island fortress outside the harbor of Inchon in South Korea.

Ko recalled that as he gathered the enemy’s attention and friendship in the fall of 1950, he learned that the North Koreans had yet to set up their full defenses. He passed the intelligence on to Lt Clark.

Soon, Ko witnessed more than 300 ships, boats and landing craft unloading an assault force of several thousand troops who took the unprepared enemy by surprise. “I felt good to think that I had done my part,” Ko said.

Ko related how he had asked Lt Clark to write him a recommendation based on what he had done to help make the Inchon invasion successful, which he later used to allow him to serve in the same capacity with the 1st Marine Division. In the fall of 1950, outside a mountain village near the Chosin Reservoir, Ko advised the Marines that more than 120,000 Chinese soldiers were waiting to ambush them.

NOTES: Much of Eddie Ko’s story has appeared in The Graybeards, but the above photograph of 14-year old Eddie Ko with Lt Eugene F Clark has not, and we feel it is important that it is. All members of Chapter 169 are most grateful for Eddie’s special effort to present the medallions.

A Good Starting Point

Many people are aware that the combatants in Korea signed an armistice on July 27, 1953. However, there may not be a lot of people who know what the document contained. The men and women involved in the actual commission of the war were more concerned with the cessation of the fighting and how it affected them than they were with the wording of a document. So, it is appropriate here to include in our special edition with the text of the Korean War armistice agreement, which was a long time coming.

Book Review

“Dust in the Wind”

Note: The Foreword is written by The Graybeards editor, Arthur G. Sharp.

By Rego Barnett

Running with the Dogs is an action-packed account of one U.S. Marine Corps company’s role in the Korean War (Dog Co. 2nd Battalion, 7th Regiment, aka D/2/7) and how the individuals in it fought and saw the war. Silver Star recipient Frankville, who entered the war without benefit of any boot camp training, makes it clear that none of the Marines were super heroes. They were just there to play their assigned roles. “Being a Marine rifleman was a “low tech” job,” he wrote. “If you could throw rocks, you could do what I did.” (p. 95)

The author reveals facts about the war that will make some readers’ blood boil, such as his grisly account on page 32 of D/2/7’s discovery of thousands of massacred South Korean, Dutch, and American Soldiers at Hoengsong in March 1951. (The massacre took place three weeks earlier.)

“When we got to the trucks we saw bodies—lots of them—stripped to their underwear. Sadly, most of them were American soldiers. We were in shock. We kept asking each other, “How could this happen?”...

The scene was eerie and practically indescribable. In the cold weather, the battlefield had been preserved and frozen in time. We learned that this action had taken place approximately twenty-five days before we arrived—twenty-five days!”

Frankville discusses the scene in great detail, the reactions of his fellow Marines, reasons for the ensuing cover-up by U.S. Army officials, how the Marines avenged the massacred Soldiers’ deaths, etc. The pages he devotes to the massacre remove any doubt from readers’ minds that there is romance involved in war.

In other sections of the book he addresses the status of civilians trying to survive in the middle of a war and how the Marines tried to put them at ease. For example:

I went up to a young boy and handed him a stick of gum. The boy had never seen or chewed gum before. He stared at it for a second or so, not knowing what it was. His mother, kneeling next to him, hit him for his hesitation. The boy got the hint. He put the gum in his mouth, wrapper and all, and started chewing.

No doubt he figured he might as well die chewing some strange substance, wrapper and all. We learned quickly that the Chinese had told the villagers the Americans would kill them if they came to their village. We put that idea to rest quickly. We gave them some of our meager rations and left as friends. (p. 51)

Frankville shows that he is a master story teller in his many vignettes of a war within a war. For example, he tells stories about:

- the Marines’ showdown with some of their French allies who stole a hat from a Korean kid (the Marines made them give it back lest they start a war within a war), p.27;
- how Marines and Chinese soldiers reacted after surprising one another while collecting water from a spring for their comrades (they simply glanced at each other and walked in opposite directions), pp. 163-64 As Frankville commented, “We got a break. Apparently, there was peace at the water hole, if not in the rest of Korea.”

Throughout the book Frankville maintains a unique balance among the philosophy of war, the viewpoints of the troops fighting it, the pathos associated with war from the combatants’ and natives trapped in the middle’s standpoints, and the valor of them all. His ability to tell a story through the use of stories is remarkable, as anyone who reads Running with the Dogs will learn quickly.

Frankville did not write Running with the Dogs just to express his views or recall his experiences. His goal is to make sure that the war in which he fought for over a year is remembered. He makes that clear in the blurb on the book’s back jacket:

“Hundreds of firefights, patrols, and battles take place in a war. Most are just fading memories in the minds of the survivors. Those killed are registered in the casualty reports. This also will fade to the backwaters of history and, over time, to those who are remembered on Memorial Day as the ‘war dead.’ The personal sacrifices and pain will be just…dust in the wind.”

Those who take the time to read Running with the Dogs are not likely to treat the warriors who fought in the war as “dust in the wind.” Nor are they likely to forget Frankville’s moving account of D/2/7’s role in the Korean War—or the war itself.

In March 1951, he and a good friend, Joseph Violette, volunteered for duty in Korea. At Chipyong-ni, Russo was assigned to...
A Btry., 15AAA Automatic Weapons Bn. He was assigned temporary duty in July 1951 as a medic for the 2nd Abn. Inf. Ranger Company, 7th Inf. Div. before the Ranger units were disbanded in August 1951.

He was with the 32nd Inf. Regt. “Task Force Lulu” Tank Infantry Assault Group during the September 1951 “Operation Cleaver” assaults from the Chup-a-ri to Kumsong, North Korea area where he was slightly injured. He served in the Chuncheon-Hwachon, Yanggu-inje, Iron Triangle and Punchbowl fighting area.

Russo has many memories of the Korean War. One was riding the “cattle cars” from Pusan. Before they left, the personnel back there had scared the soon-to-be combat vets with all kinds of stories about guerrillas attacking the trains, trains getting stuck in tunnels, etc. While trying to sleep on the train, Ronald LaRocque, stepped down beside him. Russo almost stabbed him in the leg.

Another memory was when he helped to bring American bodies out of graves where they were assassinated by North Koreans or Chinese troops. He will never forget how their hands and feet were wired behind their backs, before they were shot from behind over these shallow graves. He hopes God had a special place in heaven for all those young American soldiers.

and communications with Mr. Thomas Lauria of Air Force Historical Research Agency, United States Air Force, it is believed that the 452nd Bombardment Wing stationed at Itazuke Air Base, Japan carried out this raid.

During the Chinese civil wars from the 1920s to the establishment of People’s Republic of China in 1949, many family members of Mao Zedong, including siblings, wife, and children, were killed by the Nationalists. Mao had two sons who survived the wars. One had brain damage caused by police brutality when he was a street child in Shanghai in 1930, so he could not live a normal life. The other, Mao Anying, was the only son who had the potential to become a prominent Chinese leader.

Mao Anying was tall, handsome, intelligent, and educated in the Soviet Union. During World II, he joined the Russian Army to fight the Nazis. Mao Anying had all the qualifications and elements to become Mao’s successor. In the thousands of years of Chinese history, it was the norm that the favorite (and in this case, the only eligible) son inherited the dynasty. If Mao Anying had survived the Korean War and come home as a war hero, there would have been no foreseeable reasons that he would not have succeeded his father after Mao’s death in 1976.

If anyone doubts this conclusion, just look at what Mao Zedong did in his last years. Before his death in 1976, Mao’s most trusted inner circle was full of family members: Jiang Qing (wife), Mao Yuxin (Mao’s only male nephew), and Zhang Yufeng (mistress). In other words, Mao had included all of his capable family members into his inner circle. There was absolutely no reason to believe that Mao Anying would not become the chosen successor, if he had still been alive and healthy.

If Mao Anying became the successor of Mao Zedong, the instigator of the brutal policies of the culture revolution, it would be unlikely that the son would carry out a policy that would be dramatically different from his father. Today’s China would be pretty much like today’s North Korea. The Chinese economic miracle of the past 30 years would never have come to pass.

After Mao Zedong’s death in 1976, China made astonishing progress. The success of the Chinese economy is largely due to Deng Xiaoping’s political and economic policy, which required the complete abolishment of Mao’s agenda and policy.

China would never have become the economic powerhouse it is today; the United States would not be full of products “Made in China,” the millions of Chinese students and immigrants would not have spread throughout the United States (and the world), and so on...

I came to the United States from China in the 1980s. I was a scholar, student, and an immigrant, and now I am a U.S. citizen. As I am writing this article and living in my house with my wife and two lovely U.S.-born daughters, I cannot help but wonder: what if Mao Anying, the favorite son of Mao Zedong, had not been killed in that air raid in Korea and was currently ruling China? What would my life be like? But then I look at today’s North Korea and I pretty much get the idea.

I am so grateful for the opportunity that my family and I have had in the United States, and I also strongly believe that all of my fellow Chinese – and for that matter, people of all nations – should be equally grateful for that bowl of egg fried rice and the 452nd Bombardment Wing.

NOTE: Because of the historic significance of this air raid, I have been working with the staff of the Air Force Historical Research Agency to find more information, especially the names of the crew members who actually carried out the raid. But we have exhausted all possible sources of information and could not pinpoint the names.

If it is possible, I would like to interview/meet crew members who served in the 452nd Bombardment Wing in November 1950. It would be great if you could provide possible sources of information on this.

Bad Night On The MLR

I had been in Korea about four months, and on the front lines about 2-1/2 months. It was a heat wave that night—only about 10 degrees below. I was in an old bunker across the valley from T-Bone Hill, where Hill 347 came down into the valley. There were two guys in the bunker with me when we heard a fire fight start.

We came out in the trench and determined that the firefight was way out in the valley. We could see the flashes from the rifles. They went on for about ten minutes.

We went down to platoon leader Lt. Swift’s bunker to see what was going on. He told us that Easy Co. had been hit in an ambush. The news had come in over the telephone.

Their medic said all of them were down.

“I have been hit and I am still giving morphine to all I can find. HELP!” he pleaded.

Then a call came over the radio for Fox Co. to go out and get them. About a half hour later we heard the rifles again. Fox Co. had been ambushed also.

Next, we received a request on the radio for George Co. to get ready to bail Easy Co. out. Lt. Swift called us together and said, “We will go another way.”

It took us about an hour or more to get to Easy Co. The Chinese came back and opened up on us. Our machine gunner froze. He was constantly firing 50-60 rounds at a time from about 20 yards from me. I crawled up, stopped him, and told him to fire in short bursts.

I came back to where I had been before and heard something hit behind us. Eugene Brown was on my right. He asked me, “Did you hear that?”

“Yes,” I said.

“Boom.” The noise rolled me over, and I could not hear for a few minutes.

Brown asked repeatedly, “Are you all right? Okay...are you okay?”

After that we threw 3 or 4 grenades and opened up full blast on them. Then they left.

We started to get the boys out. Lt. Swift said, “Let’s get out of here before daylight, or we will be sitting ducks!”

The South Korean boys said they did not want to carry the litters out. When Lt. Swift heard that, he came over and demanded, “You take these boys out.” He raised his Carbine rifle and ordered an ultimatum to the South Koreans: “Take them out or you will be taken out on a litter! You understand?”

That got their attention. They took off!! Have litters, will travel!

George Harvey, David Spradlin, and Carroll Hook found some of our wounded comrades, placed them on litters, and got them out. We thought we had all of the wounded, and we were ready to go. But, I heard a groan.

“Did you hear that?” I asked Brown.

“What?” he said.

“That groan,” I replied.

“No,” he answered.

Then we heard it again.

Brown said, “I heard it that time!”

So, I asked 4 or 5 guys to cover me. I crawled toward the noise for about 15 to 20 yards, and found the one soldier we had missed. I returned to our position and got some help. We reached the badly wounded man and moved him.

We carried him about a half mile to a jeep. The medic put in an IV and got us moving.

When we got there, I stayed a while to talk, then I remembered that in the valley when George Company came and got Easy company out. One of them jumped up, gave me a big hug, and said to his wife, “This is one of the men who saved our lives that night!”

His name was Bob Petzold. He was one of the guys that we rescued. Now I see him at all of the reunions and call him sometimes! I am glad to know he made it out okay.

Lt. Swift spent 22 years in service, and retired as a Lt. Colonel. 1st Lt. Russell, the company commander, now lives in Atlanta, GA.

If anyone from George Company wants to talk, you can reach me at 804 271-0768 or write me at Winfred Clark, 7007 Fairpines Rd., Chesterfield, VA 23832. My email address is winfredclark27007@yahoo.com
Who Was ‘Iron Mike’ Michaelis?

Under enemy gunfire in Normandy, the 502nd’s commander broke a leg. The 101st commander Taylor named Iron Mike Michaelis (only 32 years old) to command the regiment, and later promoted him to full colonel.

In the summer of 1950, while the U.S. Army’s 24th Inf. Div. (“The Victory Division”) was near the Kum River in Korea, advanced elements of the U.S. Army’s 25th Inf. Div. (“The Tropic Lightning”) landed at Pusan, South Korea from July 10-13, 1950. They went north of Taegu, and to Taegu’s seaport, Pohang, where the U.S. Army’s 1st Cav. Div. landed and moved west to reinforce the 24th Inf. Div., putting three Eighth Army divisions into Korean War combat.

The 25th Inf. Div. was commanded by Major General William B. (“Bill”) Kean, a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy (USMA), Class of 1919. The three regiments of the 25th Inf. Div. were the 24th, 27th, and 35th. Before the Korean War, they had been stationed in the southern part of the main Japanese home island of Honshu.

The 24th Inf. Regt. (“Deuce Four”) had three battalions, and the 27th Inf. Regt. (“Wolfhounds”), and the 35th Inf. Regt. (“The Cacti”) each had two battalions. The 27th Inf. Regt. would lead the 25th Inf. Div. to Korea.

General Kean named 37-year-old LtCol John Hersey (“Iron Mike”) Michaelis, (USMA, 1936), to command the 27th Inf. Regt. Iron Mike was ten years or more younger than most American regimental commanders at the time. He had enlisted in the U.S. Army as a private in 1931, and later won an appointment to West Point. In WWII, he was a paratrooper with the 502nd Regiment of Maxwell D. Taylor’s 101st Airborne Division.

Under enemy gunfire in Normandy, the 502nd’s commander broke a leg. The 101st commander Taylor named Iron Mike Michaelis (only 32 years old) to command the regiment, and later promoted him to full colonel. Michaelis was wounded in Holland, and was in the Battle of the Bulge. After WWII, Iron Mike served in the Pentagon, as senior aide to Army Chief of Staff Gen Dwight Eisenhower, and he was reduced in rank to LtCol.

In 1950, before his troops moved out to Korea, Iron Mike had them reduce their gear, paratrooper style, to weapons, ammo, water, and rations. Everything else was left behind. This came from his studies of oriental jungle fighting tactics.

Gen Kean and LtCol Michaelis flew to Korea on July 8, 1950, ahead of the shipborne division, to get the lay of the land. The 27th Inf. Regt. landed at Pusan on July 10, 1950, where it merged with the 8th FAB, commanded by Augustus T. (Gus) Terry Jr. The 24th Inf. Regt., commanded by Horton V. White (USMA, 1923), landed at Pusan on July 12, 1950, and was merged with the 159th FAB, commanded by Walter J. Preston.

The last of General Kean’s 25th Inf. Div. combat elements, the 35th Inf. Regt., landed at Pusan on July 13, 1950, commanded by Henry G. (“Hank”) Fisher (USMA, 1923), and was combined with the 64th FAB, commanded by Arthur H. Hogan (USMA, 1932).

At Hwanggan, July 24-25, 1950, the American Wolfhound regiment, with the Far East Air Force (FEAF), knocked out enemy T-34 tanks, delaying a full-scale North Korean People’s Army (NKPA) attack for the first time, and then withdrew by the book. In early August 1950, LtCol Michaelis’ troops contained a NKPA attack and killed around 600 of the enemy. The 27th Inf. Regt. was not withdrawing, but attacking, as Gen Ridgway had vowed to do.

In February 1951, Gen Ridgway promoted 38-year-old Michaelis to Brigadier General, and named him the assistant division commander (ADC) of the 25th Inf. Div. Later, Gen Eisenhower cabled Gen Ridgway from NATO to say that he needed Iron Mike in his command.

On May 6, 1951, Mike went to NATO. He later became the Commandant of Cadets at West Point, and then the commander of the 5th Army. In 1969, Mike received his fourth star, and became Commander in Chief U.N. Command (CINCUNC), Commander U.S. Forces Korea (COMUSFK), and Commanding General Eighth U.S. Army (CGEUSA).

General Iron Mike Michaelis retired from active duty in 1972. He died at Clayton, GA on October 31, 1985, and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery in Columbarium, Section I-QQ. He was survived by his wife, Mary, and two daughters.

July 4, 1953 In Korea

Today, actually this morning, some 63 years ago, the sun came out as usual and it was very humid in that far off land called Korea. Task Force Smith, a group of a little more than 500 men, from the 24th Infantry Division, including Artillery and Medical, spent the night of the 4th of July, 1950, hunkered down in fox holes awaiting the onslaught of the North Korean Army that was steam rolling down Korea. They woke up tired and hungry and had that feeling in their stomachs.

Then, on 5 July, “the you know what” hit the fan. A gallant fight followed and the Americans fought bravely, even though they were outnumbered, outgunned and unprepared for battle. This morning, 63 years ago, many Americans were killed in action, wounded in action, and captured. The first Americans captured in the Korean War began their long imprisonment in Korea. Many would not make it home and their bones are still bleaching in the sun of North Korea. These men were subjected to torture and barbaric brutal captivity.

This year we will commemorate the 60 years since the cease fire in Korea. But let us not forget those brave men who met the enemy on this day 63 years ago. Don’t let history move the brush so quickly.

I have to think that without Task Force Smith—many of them good friends of mine—North Korea might have taken South Korea by storm. Think of the implications if that had happened.

And there is no such thing as the “Forgotten War.” Communism was dealt a death blow and now many who lived under communism are free. Freedom is indeed not free, and that is not true in North Korea, where there is no freedom at all.

We salute the brave men of Task Force Smith, who were sent into the inferno of battle and who deserve our praise and thanks for a job very well done.

if You Can't Lead, Interpret

I just received my copy of the May-June 2013 issue memorializing the 60th anniversary of the armistice in Korea. I was particularly taken with the story by Morris Breed, a participant in the wiping out of the 3rd Battalion of the 29th Infantry Regiment at Hadong in July1950. I thought Breed’s story was very readable and rang very true. Kudos for printing it and to him for his recollections.

In 1985, I was serving as the U.S. Consul General in the U.S. Embassy in Seoul. A Korean newspaperman who was a good friend of mine was originally from Hadong. He invited me to visit the area one weekend and attend the local Rotary Club meeting. We toured the general area and he showed me the battlefield where the 3rd Battalion had fought and where General Chae Byong Duk and the American battalion commander, LtCol Harold W. Mott, were killed.

Since 35 years had passed, the ground did not look anything like Breed’s account. However, there is a memorial in the area where most of the killing took place. The account on it explained that General Chae was killed by a sniper while acting as a translator for the Americans.

Some background: General Chae was the “Japanese General” referred to by Breed. General Chae in 1950, like most senior Korean officers, had served in the Japanese Army, and Japanese was their second language. He had been, at the beginning of the war, Chief of Staff of the Korean Army. He was, according to historian Clay Blair, 36 years old, 5’6” and 250 pounds. He was known as “Fat Chae.”

According to Blair, Chae had abandoned his troops and crossed the Han River with President Syngman Rhee just before the bridges were blown. When General MacArthur visited the Han River bridge sites and saw with his own eyes the demoralization of the Korean Army and the fleeing populace, General Chae was there. MacArthur was singularly unimpressed by the fat and sweating little General. Chae, who was broken in disgrace by President Rhee, fled south.

A pontoon bridge over the Han River in March 1951
To compensate for his failure as a commander, Chae volunteered to serve as a translator with American forces. It was as such that he found himself with the ill-fated 29th Infantry.

That same year of 1985, I attended the American Ambassador’s 4th of July reception in Seoul, where I met BGen Brad Smith of Task Force Smith fame. Smith had also put on a little weight in the ensuing 35 years, and I recollect that he seemed as corpulent as the tragic Chae Byung Duk.

Thank You, Steel Strikers

Here is my recollection of the effect of the steel strike in the spring of 1952, referenced in the March/April 2013 edition, “A Steel Strike In The Middle Of A War?” p. 64. My unit was 2nd Pl., A Co, 1st Armored Amphibian Bn., 1st Marine Division. Our position was on the Kimpo Peninsula, on the far western flank of the UN forces.

We were in support of the Korean Marines and other UN units. We knew that there was an ammo shortage of 75mm artillery shells. We were told that there was a shortage in Okinawa, where our supplies came from. Our fire missions were cut back. There was no more nighttime harassment and interdiction fire. Only confirmed targets would get our full battery of six tanks firing 60 rounds in a fire-at-will situation.

Our unit was very effective. We could move around the peninsula to different positions as needed. We could even cross over to Kangwa-do Island to fire from different angles. Our tanks were too slow for us to be part of the main division on the east coast. (The division moved to the west coast in the spring of 1952.)

I joined the platoon as part of the 12th draft in August 1951, and stayed with it until August 1952. After rotation I was assigned to the 2nd Division at Camp Lejeune, NC. I finished my enlistment as a sergeant at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Seder In The Middle Of The Pacific

The article “A Seder in Seoul” in the March-April 2013 edition, p. 23, reminded me of an interesting Seder I conducted aboard USS Breckenridge in the middle of the Pacific in April of 1954. I am not Jewish, but my father was; my mother was Catholic. I always kidded that I was semi-Semitic.

I was the editor of the ship’s newspaper aboard that vessel. The paper was actually published by the Chaplain, who was Protestant. He asked me about my religious affiliation. When I told him of my background, he said, “Good, you are going to conduct the Seder for the Jewish troops aboard.” It seems that he had all the articles necessary for the traditional Seder. And so it was that I conducted the Seder in one of the compartments topside.

There were about thirty Jewish soldiers and a few sailors aboard. It was a very moving experience, and one that I enjoyed. There were no complaints from the participants about this “goyishe” sergeant conducting the Seder. (Goyishe is a Hebrew/Yiddish term for someone/thing which is not Jewish.)

It took a while to find the youngest among us to ask the traditional questions and to find the oldest to answer them. Imagine this: alcohol aboard a Navy ship—the traditional wine. The men in the galley managed to get out a decent meal and all enjoyed the evening.

Happy Birthday From “Bedcheck Charley”

In the May-June edition of The Graybeards, p. 64, there was a question about “Bedcheck Charley,” i.e., “Does ‘Bedcheck Charley’ Count In An Ace’s Total?” For those who do not know that much about this airplane, you can see one at the “Military Aviation Museum” in Virginia Beach, VA.

Of course, the Korean War “Charlies” were painted black. “Charley” visited K-13 (Suwon) on my birthday 30 December 1952.

Keith Bennett Was A Fine Man

How great it was to see Keith Bennett’s photo in your story about the 1953 Armistice (“A Long Time Coming,” p. 54). We were on two mountain radar sites, Taegu and near Kangnung, during our eighteen-month tour. Both of us were kept in Pyongyang with our units until all the UN forces had moved south of us. Bennett was loading aircraft and flew out.

I had been pulling a midnight shift on guard duty in our squadron billet area elsewhere in the city. At dawn I got assigned to drive a 6x6 with a “Shotgun Rider” (SSgt Stasney) and two passengers in a radio van to Seoul when I came off my post. That was around November 30, 1950. There were just Chinese north of town when we departed. We had watched four days of southbound military vehicles go past us before.

I had to drive about 45 mph to catch the Sherman tanks that carried infantrymen hanging on for dear life a few miles south of town.

On those bumpy “washboard roads” that was no pleasure trip.

We drove all day and night, with “Road Block” stops by the Military Police along the way. It was cold in the open cab truck, but we made it through the mountain passes and into Seoul at dawn the next day.

That letter of Keith’s, telling about how discouraging it was to have the “Armistice Talks” starting and stopping for months, was indicative of the fine man he was. Keith was a hard-working and good-hearted man. He provided a lot of entertainment for us “Hillbillies” who were stuck on the mountain for weeks on end.

When we had slack time, Keith would get his guitar and sing some of our favorite songs from home. I thank him for teaching me a lot of good country songs while we entertained ourselves in the squad tents or Quonset Huts in which we were billeted. I still sing some of those “oldies” when I can so Keith’s spirit is still alive and well in our memories.

Keith and his dear wife Clara Jean lived in Ohio after he left the Air Force. We kept in touch for years later. Their son became a “Blue Grass” musician, too.

By the way, it was Keith Bennett and Clara Jean who got me to join KWVA when they made me aware that it existed, many years ago.

Why Don’t You Write Stories About…

EDITOR’S NOTE: Now is a good time for a refresher on why we don’t often publish stories about specific units, battles, individuals, etc. Here is an email I received and my response to it, which applies in all cases regarding why we don’t publish certain stories:

Why doesn’t The Graybeards publish much about the naval aircraft carrier war, such as our squadron VF-54, CAG-5 hitting the bridges of Toko-ri. Our skipper on this mission was Paul N. Gray, who has written several articles about it.

Next is the bombing of Kapsan, where Chinese and North Korean leaders were holding a meeting to discuss strategy on the war and what they were going to do about it.

Jack L. Hatchitt (“TAILHOOK JACK”)

EDITOR’S RESPONSE: Thanks for asking. We only publish stories that our members send us. Occasionally we reprint articles from other publications, with their express permission. We cannot violate copyright laws.

We do not have a staff that writes stories. (In fact, we don’t have a
What Do I Need In My Shadow Box?

Glen Newsome, who served in Korea from September 1966 through October 1968, asked for information about what to include in his shadow box (“What Do I Need In My Shadow Box?”, Recon Missions, May-June 2013, p. 68). His request led to an exchange with John Gavel and some advice from Bruce P. Macdonald.

Gavel began the exchange by sending Newsome three articles to get him started with his shadow box and the below information. (We have combined two emails here.)

Glen:

It would be helpful if you had your DD-214 discharge. If you don’t, go to www.nara.gov and follow the “get your military record” instructions.

You need to decide whether you want to go with official or earned awards. There are two categories of awards that will not be on your DD-214: those you were awarded after discharge and those the U.S. Army has chosen not to accept. (Note: you need not worry about running afoul of any laws regarding what’s in your shadow box. They apply only to what is worn on the uniform, the Medal of Honor, and a proposed one on making money with a false claim.)

The U.S. awarded Korean Service veterans a Korea Defense Service medal a few years back. This will not be on your DD-214, but you can send in a form and have it added. The same is true for any U.S. Army unit citations. The U.S. has chosen not to accept the ROK Defense Service medal, just as they refused the ROK War Service medal for 50 years. It’s available commercially; you can decide if you wish to include it or not. The same is true for the ROK Presidential Unit Citation, awarded to 2nd ID, accepted, but not allowed to be worn on the uniform.

Also available commercially are U.S. medals and ribbons. The government may issue you any U.S. awards you earned but have not received. Based on what you said in The Greybeards, I would say you earned:

• Good Conduct medal
• National Defense Service medal
• Armed Forces Expeditionary medal
• Korea Defense Service medal
• ROK Defense Service medal
• ROK Presidential Unit Citation

You would know if you got an ARCOM pinned onto you. A U.S. Meritorious Unit Citation is likely. I am an Air Force guy, so I would have to double check these.

The period 1966-68 was known as the Second Korean War and the AFEM was awarded because of all the fire fights during that period. The NK felt that they were showing solidarity with the North Vietnamese since the ROK had sent two regiments to fight them. They made an exception to the rule of one award for one action in awarding both the AFEM and the KDSM.

A lot of post-armistice vets feel that the UN should award a service medal also but the UN and most war vets don’t. The odd thing is that the cutoff for the UN medal was one year after the armistice was signed. The U.S. Korea War Service medal and the U.S. KDSM both start and stop on the date of the armistice.

There are also shoulder cords, badges, rank insignia, etc. you could add to a shadow box. Enough for now.

I think these three articles will help you to decide what you need to put in the shadow box. If I missed anything you think might also belong let me know.

If we had not been there I doubt the ROK would still be a free country; my regret is that we failed to do so for the Republic of Vietnam.

John Gavel, Melbourne, FL

Newsome responded:

John:

I agree on both counts. We were always frustrated at the rules of engagement in Korea. In theory, when on patrol and in the field, we could not chamber a round nor could we fire unless fired upon. Some of us, especially those of us on point, did not comply with the regulations.

The point man would always keep a round in the chamber with the safety on. Our Platoon Sergeant was aware of what we were doing and we did not get in trouble for doing so. I concluded that he was giving us tacit approval. Common sense was not always the Army’s strength. What we did was a matter of common sense as it took less than a second to flick the safety on and we could do so when raising the weapon to fire.

I was in Korea in 1967 during Israel’s 7-day war. We followed it with great interest and even greater envy as they were allowed to play offense when needed, and we were stuck on defense.

I agree with respect to the UN Medal, the Korea Service Medal, and the ROK PUC. I also agree with your comments with respect to both countries. My two brothers served in Vietnam while I was in Korea. All three of us went in as boys but came back as men. We also came back as changed men. One of my brothers has post traumatic stress disorder.

With the three of us being in the Army under less than pleasant circumstances, many grey hairs were added to our mother’s head. She came to hate LBJ.

You have been very helpful with regard to the medals/awards which I earned. I think I am going to have to pass on the CIB. I meet all of the criteria for award of this medal but never had an Infantry MOS. We may have been on TDY during the Scout School, but this is only speculation on my behalf.

Again, I appreciate all of your help. It is always good to talk to another veteran with similar experiences. It has helped me to open up some after all of these years. Best regards,

Glen

Gavel got back to him with this:

Glad to have helped. I was stationed at U-Tapao Oct72-Oct73, went through Line Backer II, the end of the Vietnam War, and the bombing in Laos and Cambodia. I ran a fuel airtlift from April to July and got to know what the Cambodians knew, i.e., that when the U.S. withdrew the Khmer Rouge would kill everybody, as they in fact did.

My Korea tour was Oct79-Oct81 and began with the assassination of President Park and ended with the NK firing on the SR-71. While not as active as your tour, it was still a busy time.

I inherited a major ROK-U.S. fuel agreement management/accounting problem that filled in between alerts and exercises. I even managed to complete an updated fuel distribution study and A-10 bed-down. As busy as those times were, my follow on to SEA was an assignment to the RDJTF/Centcom for a four-year tour.

No wonder I wore out at 25 years service!

Take pride in being a Korea Service veteran and enjoy the good memories!

John Gavel

Macdonald also had some sage advice for Newsome.

I would suggest that you visit a Veterans Service Officer (VSO) at the nearest office of the North Carolina Department of Veterans Affairs. (Newsome is a resident of North Carolina.) The VSO can request your issue as of the current date and they will be sent to you at no charge, with a letter of proof for your records.

Your separation papers (DD-214, etc.) will list your awards as of date of separation. In your case (1966-68) it may not be complete as the Korean Defense medal was not approved for issue at that time.

If you are missing your DD-214, your VSO can help you replace it. Every vet should have supplied their next of kin with their DD-214. (Italics added) At time of death the funeral director must have proof of military service to apply for veterans’ death benefits. No proof, no benefits.

To add to your shadow box display, check out Medal of America Catalog (800) 308-0849. They have everything for medal displays, including a line of commemorative medals, some of which you would qualify for.

Speaking Of Medals…

As an old MP I am a “Ribbon Checker.” Thus, I note with some dismay that many of our veterans pictured have no idea of the correct order of wear of their ribbons.

This is just a suggestion. Perhaps The Graybeards could include some display pages of the correct order of wear for each branch of the military. Some of our members would appreciate the info and act on it.

I have corrected ribbon displays in a helpful manner and always get a “Thank you, I never knew” reply.

Just an idea.

We Were There, Too

James McCarthy wrote in the May-June 2013 edition that “The 3rd Infantry Division was the only U.S. unit directly involved in this offensive effort [the Kumsong area, to straighten the MLR]. It took most of a week to get most of this lost territory back.”

The 180th Regiment of the 45th Division was also involved in that offensive effort, east of the 3rd Division, and facing Christmas Hill. My 179th Regiment replaced our 180th Regiment ten days before the cease fire went into effect. Our 45th Division also suffered heavy losses in that short period of time.

Read My Father’s Letters

My father, Kenneth John Zill, served in the Army from 1951-1953 and fought in the Korean War. (He served with E Company, 180 Infantry Regiment, 45th Infantry Division (“Thunderbirds.”)) After my mother passed away I found the letters that my dad wrote to my mom and to his parents. I have started to type them into a blog to share with my family and friends. I currently only have January-March 1951 up, but I will continue to post them as I get them typed.

I have had several other veterans comment on how much they enjoyed reading them as they had experienced the same feelings. I would like to share my site with your readers. There is no charge and I make no money off it. I just want to share my dad’s letters and honor him.

My site is www.lvandenberghe.net.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Where Is The Imjin River?

I just received my May-June Graybeards and came across an article about Boulder City on pp. 50-51. It states, “The Chinese were trying to take Boulder City because it would give them a foothold across the Imjin river and a clear shot at Seoul.”

Since I was on Boulder City, I know it is not on the Seoul side of the Imjin river. As I recall, the river is about 2 or 3 kilometers south-west of Boulder City.
During the last week of the war, it got quite intense in that area, as the Chinese were indeed trying to take Boulder City. I can understand how someone could be unaware of the exact location of the river.

I visited the area in 2003 with a group which included Col John Peeler, who was the Company Commander of Item Co in 1953. He was on Boulder City in July of 1953. We could not visit the exact area, but we were within 2 or 3 kilometers at the Boulder City outpost, which was manned by the Korean 25th Div.

Eligibility For The Korean Service Medal
I am not a Korean War veteran, but I served with the 2nd Infantry Division in South Korea from 1981 to 1982. Many of my missions were conducted in the DMZ.

The Korean Service Medal was awarded to those who served in the Korean War. If you received the Korean Service Medal then you are a Korean War veteran. The Korean War did not end 60 years ago on July 27, 1954; it ended on July 27, 1954.

This past October 2012 I attended the KWVA convention in St. Louis, MO, where I met Mr. George Bruzgis. He is a Korean War veteran who was assigned to the 7th Infantry Division in early 1953. Mr. Bruzgis was present in Korea during July 1953.

When I talked to him he made one point clear. It was broadcast to all the troops on the peninsula that a “Cease Fire” would occur in late July - the date is the 27th. An exchange of POWs from warring governments would take place during the cease fire.

Mr. Bruzgis made another point clear: both sides did not resume combat operations on the Koran peninsula. The U.S. Government cited July 27, 1954 as the official end of the Korean War.

Also, in Army Regulation 600-8-22, dated December 11, 2006, as well as Secretary of the Navy Instruction 1650.1 H, dated August 22, 2006, and the DoD Bible - Department of Defense Manual of Awards and Decorations 1348.33, dated November 23, 2010, it is stated that the official end of eligibility for the Korean Service Medal is July 27, 1954.

The U.S. Air Force is still officially revising its publication, which should be completed soon.

Yellow Fever, Yellow Jaundice, Hepatitis?
How can I get more information on yellow fever or yellow jaundice? A friend is telling me about his getting deathly sick with what the doctors in Korea, and Japan, where he was sent, called either yellow fever or jaundice. But, when I do a search on these, it says they only occur in Africa or South America.

His symptoms sound like he had yellow fever/jaundice, e.g., yellow skin and eyes, liver enlarged and painful, paralyzed for two weeks. He was told there was no treatment and the prognosis was grim. He said there were 1,300 men in the hospital in Japan with the same condition in April 1951.

I found some references to parasitic diseases, but no information about the problems they caused. I was also unable to find figures on deaths from various diseases in Korea. Is there a resource for this? Thanks.

EDITOR’S NOTE: It’s possible he was talking about hepatitis. I found the U.S. Army Medical Department, Office of Medical History website, http://history.amedd.army.mil/booksdocs/wwi/internalmedicinevolIII/chapter13.htm. The chapter referenced was written by W. Paul Havens, Jr., M.D. Here is an excerpt from it:

“Over the years after World War II, the duration of hospitalization for hepatitis increased until it became as long as 89 days in certain groups during the Korean War. This was doubtless a natural outcome of the failure to discern the reason for the occurrence of relapse or prolonged disease and the belief that more rest would prevent them. The point was finally reached when this concept was questioned, and it was subsequently shown by Chalmers and his associates that men could be sent back to duty quite safely in shorter periods. In addition, they demonstrated that allowing men out of bed around the room or ward except for an hour’s rest after each meal did not prolong the course of the disease but actually hastened an earlier return to duty. See Chalmers, T. C., Reynolds, W. E., Eckhardt, R. D., Cigarroa, J. G., Dean, M., Reifenstein, R. W., Smith, C. W., and Davidson, C. S.: Treatment of Acute Infectious Hepatitis in Armed Forces. Advantages of ad lib. Bed Rest and Early Reconditioning. J.A.M.A. 159: 1431-1434, 10 Dec. 1955.”

There is more valuable information at the aforementioned website. If anyone has any information about yellow fever/jaundice, hepatitis, or whatever the condition may have been called during the Korean War, please send it to The Graybeards Feedback Editor, 152 Sky View Drive, Rocky Hill, CT 06067.

A Secret Mission Stays Secret
Re the article in the Jan-Feb 2013 edition, “Special Forces In Korea,” p. 62: I, too, was classified top secret. I think that I still have that classification.

Five of us from 2nd Inf. Div. were called into our C.O.’s office and were told that we were to go to North Korea at about 2 a.m. on a mission that was so secret that we would never talk about it, not even when we got home. They told us this was to protect me and my Army buddies on the mission behind enemy lines to meet two VIPs and bring them to South Korea.

There is a lot still to tell, but I’m sworn to secrecy. We had no identification to reveal our names or outfit. We accomplished our mission. About a week later I was transferred to another outfit in Tokyo. I never saw my four buddies again, but I did get a medal.

Reno Connor (not my real name)

EDITOR’S NOTE: How long must the details of such a mission be kept quiet? Isn’t it okay to reveal them after sixty years? How many of our members were engaged in similar missions during the Korean War? Let us know.

Names, Please?

The members of the 1st Cavalry Division Artillery in the nearby photo were pictured receiving commendations from Gen Charles D. Palmer. They may have been assigned to the 105 gun section. Does anyone know who they are?

Likewise, I am looking for the names of the unidentified members of HQ 1st Cavalry Division Artillery pictured nearby. Please contact me if you can help.

And they go, and there is a great clamor as the birds are arisen unto the air. And after the “Birdmen” proceed unto the land of darkness, even to the doorway of the evil one, called by name, “Crapeth.”

Then the skies become dark with mist and the “Birdmen” stray one from another and miss their turning points and are lost utterly. They find not their targets. And great are their trepidations. They call out to one another, saying, “‘Warcry One,’ come thou unto me for I am set upon by bandits and my prop runneth away.”

But “Warcry One” replyeth, “Verily, thou shouldst drop dead, for my wings are heavy with ice and the flak hath found me out. And therefore one falleth into the land of darkness, while another scurryeth like mice and salvoeth his bombs into the sea and returneth home empty handed. Lo and behold, they are having a very massive, audible, odiferous gastro intestinal explosion.

“Oh, master where art thou in times of our need?”

And the master gathereth them together and speaketh to them of the bad show and of many practice missions and of frozen promotions and their asses he doth feast upon. So be it! Amen!!!!!

We received an invitation to attend a day of appreciation for Korean War veterans offered by the Tacoma (WA) First Baptist Church. Our chapter is located about 125 miles south of Tacoma. The church in Tacoma has a majority of South Korean expatriates in its congregation, and a senior pastor, Sung Eun (David) Choi, who is Korean by birth. The church provided Korean entertainment and a wonderful dinner of Korean food. And, they chartered the buses that brought the Korean veterans to the church!

At least half of those attending the Korean veterans appreciation event were of Korean ancestry. We are always impressed with the hospitality and generosity of the South Korean people!

Loren Mitchell, 11940 SW King James Pl., King City, OR 97224, 503-670-1382, LMitchell30@netzero.com

Nineteen of our members attended a “thank you” ceremony at the Korean Methodist Church in Paramus, NJ on June 22nd. KWVA National Directors Salvatore Scarlato and George Bruzgis also attended.

The Rev. Hyoik Kim, Associate Pastor, welcomed Korean War veterans, guests, and family members. Jr. Vice Commander Henry Ferrarini and the chapter’s Color Guard advanced and posted the Colors.

There were several guest speakers at the event, including the Honorable Kathleen Donovan, County Executive of Bergen County, NJ, Mayor Karen Chamberlain of Saddle Brook, NJ, and Eumene Kang, Consulate General of the Republic of Korea, based in New York City.

Church members presented a buffet which gave the attendees

As we have noted in past issues, there is no shortage of thanks extended from Koreans to the veterans who fought for their country’s freedom over fifty years ago. Here are more results.
time to share conversations. There was also entertainment, including Korean Traditional Dance, a sing-along, and tenor Professor Jang Gil Ji singing “Ave Maria” and other songs. Pianist Ms. Suechung Koh accompanied him.

All in all, it was a beautiful evening of fellowship.

Louis Quagliero, 142 Illinois Ave., Paterson, NJ 07503

222 – ARDEN ROWLEY [AZ]

Members attended a June 8, 2013 “thank you” ceremony planned by Susan Kee and coordinated through the Arizona Korean Association. It was held at the New Life Presbyterian Church in Phoenix, AZ. Approximately 55 Korean War veterans were in attendance.

Each attending veteran received a “Freedom is Not Free, The Korean War” medal and rose, which were pinned on their shirts as they entered. Our members posted colors. Lunch followed the ceremony. Naturally, there was some great Korean food.

We received this note from Ms. Kee later:

Dear Mr. Bradley, Mr. Stewart, and Mr. Taylor,

Thank you so much for posting colors for the ceremony yesterday honoring Korean War Veterans! We appreciate your dedication and hard work in the color guard! I know that it means a lot to the veterans to have a color guard made up of fellow Korean War veterans. You all looked great, as usual and we appreciate the work you put into the ceremony.

We hope you enjoyed the ceremony and the luncheon! I am continually humbled and thankful at the dedication and heart of our Korean War veterans.

Thank you so much and God bless you!

Sincerely,

Susan Kee, (623) 332 – 2199, sk4vets@yahoo.com

Background
The Korea Revisit program was begun by the Ministry of Patriots and Veterans Affairs (MPVA/Seoul) in 1975 for the 25th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean War to express the Republic of Korea (ROK’s) government’s gratitude to Korean War veterans and their families also to show them the bountiful results of their sacrifices and devotion.

MPVA’s Eligibility Requirements

Family members of deceased or disabled Veterans are eligible to participate in the “Korea Revisit Program.” An eligible applicant is allowed to bring a family member or friend as a “travel companion.”

Expanded Eligibility
For the 60th anniversaries (2010-13) there will be more quotas available. In addition, those who have been on a Revisit prior to 2006 can apply to return again (Call MHT for more details). Widows and family members of deceased veterans or those unable to travel are also eligible for the Revisit as Veteran Representatives.

Sundry Notes
1. The MPVA Revisit Program privileges are provided for scheduled groups only.
2. Participants are required to have a valid passport that does not expire until 6 months after return to the USA.
3. Neither MPVA Seoul nor MHT Virginia U.S.A is responsible for any loss of or damage to personal or other items; medical expenses, injuries or loss of life due to any accident of whatever nature during the Revisit tours.
4. Hospitalization, Evacuation and Trip Cancellation Insurance is required by MPVA for all veterans, companions or veteran representatives. Insurance costs are included in the admin service charge for Korea only.
5. Transportation costs to and from Korea will be borne by each person who participates in the program. The Korean government is now subsidizing airfare for persons traveling with the group administered by MHT.
6. Applications will be received/accepted on a “First-come, first-served” basis.
7. Use of frequent flyer miles or other “free” transportation is allowed, but the administrative service fee of $450.00 per person is still required for the insurance and administration.

Looking For Korean War Nurses
I’m researching Korean War military nurses. My primary goal is to locate as many Korean War military nurse veterans as possible to request an interview. My goal is to write a book on the many contributions of the Korean War military nurses and to make the world aware of your accomplishments.

My interview can be in person, by telephone, via Skype on a computer, or in written form via regular mail or email; the type of interview is decided upon by the nurse veteran. I’m flexible about interviewing the nurse veterans in person. If a family member (or members) would like to be present for the interview, I’m willing to accommodate the veteran’s and/or family’s wishes.

If the nurse veteran would prefer the interview to be conducted over several sessions, then the interview will be scheduled according to her preference.

My interview focuses on the nurse veteran’s nursing education, her experiences while serving as a military nurse during the Korean War, and her nursing employment (if any) after the Korean War. If the nurse veteran would like to see a copy of my interview questions before the interview, I’d be happy to provide a copy ahead of time. I’m willing to meet the nurse veteran’s request(s) in order to have the honor of interviewing these women.

My research indicates that there is a good chance that some of you may already have an interview on file with the Veterans History Project, the Women In Military Service to America (WIMSA) Memorial Foundation, or another location. At a later date I will access all the previously documented interviews and collections, but my current focus is on the nurse veterans still with us.

The Korean War military nurses rose to the occasion and performed competently and admirably in often challenging situations; this is the perspective I wish to focus on in my book.
