He said he didn't know he was poor while growing up. There, they raised a family of two girls, Amanda "Aggie" and Amy. He became a successful Paint Contractor, where he gave many an opportunity to earn fair wages. Friday paydays became an afternoon of BBQ, beer, and music at the house. When not working or following the girls many sporting events, Armando enjoyed traveling the country with his wife of over 61 years. Later in life, gatherings with his immediate and extended family were most important to him.
